KILLED BEAR WITH A CLUB

Maine Hunter Claims to Have Out-matched Bruin in a Hand-to-Hand Conflict.

Undeterred by the fate of the bruin that met Joe Knowles, bears are unusually numerous in the dense Maine woods this fall, I am told, remarks a correspondent of the Boston Post.

There was sent to Boston recently to be served as steaks and fricasee, a bear that perished in hand-to-hand conflict with Arthur M. Neal, an inspector on the Boston & Maine railroad.

(I am telling this for the particular benefit of those who are doubtful of the ability of Mr. Knowles to kill a bear, when armed only with a club.)

Mr. Neal tells how he fired a shotgun at the bear, then started for bruin with his hunting knife. But the bear gave him a blow with his paws that hurled the hunter 20 feet.

Then it was up to Mr. Neal to apply "primitive man" tactics. He says:

"I caught up a piece of timber on the road and brought the stick down on the bear's head with full force. Down he went, but he came back for more, and I was hard pressed for a few moments. Finally he sank to the earth without power to come back."

VALUABLE AUTOGRAPHS STOLEN.

The first page of autograph signatures in the visitors' book at the Cleveland memorial tower, which is part of the graduate college buildings of Princeton university, has been torn out and stolen. This page contains the first autograph signatures which were entered on the day of the dedication of the Graduate college, October 22, 1913, and contains the names of ex-President Taft, members of President Cleveland's family and others. Taken in collective form this page is a unique souvenir of the dedication of the Graduate college, and a warning has been sent to leading autograph dealers. In behalf of Princeton university President Hibben is offering a reward of $100 for information leading to the conviction of the offender. Fortunately this new missing page was photographed last winter by a member of the present senior class of Princeton university.

OLD CUSTOM STILL SURVIVES

Austrian Peasants Retain the Subserviency That Was Enforced During Days of Feudalism.

While I was the guest of Prince A. at his Austrian castle, writes a contributor to Chambers' Journal, Princess Karl took me under her special guidance. She insisted that I should make acquaintance with the village the morning after my arrival.

"You had better put on gloves, or at any rate the right-hand glove," she said, as I met her at the great entrance.

"I never wear gloves if I can help it," I answered. "And on a hot day like this!"

She laughed. "Well, I have warned you. You must buy your experience."

We descended the steep slope to the village, and stopped at the post office; it was likewise a cafe and a general provision store. Several peasants sat at a table drinking beer, and two or three women were talking with the postmistress. When we entered, the postmistress ran from behind her counter, the peasants rose from their bench, and crowding round the Princess Karl, they all kissed her right hand. To my intense surprise, after they had kissed the princess' hand, they each bestowed a similar attention on me.

"I warned you to wear a glove," said the princess, when the ceremony was over. "Now you know the reason. You will find that whenever you meet peasants, they will kiss your hand. They even leave their work in the fields, and run out into the road if they see you passing. Last year a young attache from the French embassy was staying here, and he had a great fright. He was walking along a road between some bean fields. The peasants were taking in the harvest, and to his horror he saw them all, men and women, suddenly throw down their scythes and rakes and rush toward him from both sides. He was convinced that they were going to attack and rob him; and so he took to his heels and ran. He never stopped until he got to the Schloss; to this day he will not believe that the poor peasants only wished to kiss his hand as a mark of respect to an excellent. At my home in Hungary the peasants kneel down and kiss the hem of your dress."

In these days such subservience seems incredible; but the custom is a survival of the days when all the peasants were slaves, and the nobles had the power of life and death over them.
