ACTION RESULT OF HABIT

Man is an Instinctive Animal and Usually He Acts First and Thinks Afterward.

At least nine-tenths of all human action is the result, purely and simply, of habit. Man is an instinctive animal in spite of the reasoning faculties that have been given to him and normally he acts first and thinks afterward.

The child is conceived and born so that he may do things and that in doing them he may develop a personal will and an individual character.

He could not even begin to form a character were it not for that universal process of habit formation. Education itself is a habit. It could never have been developed without the mechanical operations of habit.

This mechanical procedure economizes the two great essentials of education. The first is time and the second is energy.

Ideal behavior, then, involves perfect balance and sanity of action. It demands moderation in all things, with every function exercising with every other function.—Mother's Magazine.

Preventing Milk From Boiling Over.

Among the various devices which are intended to prevent milk from boiling over we noticed one which solves the problem in a very simple way, says the Scientific American. It consists of a straight tube of say two or three inches in diameter at the top and expanding somewhat toward the bottom, where it is provided with a flaring and cup-shaped end of rather large diameter, the whole being somewhat of trumpet shape. Out of the lower part are cut, say, four suitable openings, and we set the device upright in the vessel with the small end just out of the liquid. Should the milk tend to boil violently this action commences at the bottom, and the liquid is forced up the tube, then falls upon the surface again, so that the boiling action will continue in this way and the milk has no tendency to leave the vessel.

Why Fish Will Fall Upward.

The deep-sea fish are subject to a pressure internally, by gases, and externally of over two tons to the square inch, and under this pressure they are quite solid. When these fish are brought to the surface in nets their bodies become puffy, their bones loose and their eyes start out of their heads; very often they burst. This is because the pressure is released.

When these fish of the deep sea chase their prey or rise for some reason high above the ocean bed, the gases of their swimming bladders expand and they become light. The fish whose muscles are not strong enough to take it down deeper into the ocean expands more and more until it rises upward to the surface and is killed, so that it really "falls upward."

Eagle Symbol of Power.

From ancient times the eagle, as the king of birds, has been looked upon as the symbol of power. The American eagle is the native bald eagle and was first adopted on the seal of the United States on June 20, 1782, against the bitter opposition of Franklin. This patriot looked up to it as a Caesarian emblem and wanted to know what was the matter with the wild turkey, as being more distinctly American. Nevertheless the eagle was accepted, not only on the seal, but on the first coin issued by the United States in 1795, and on a majority of the coins since.

Revival of Tatting.

We see that tatting has been revived in our best circles, but we don't suppose it will be any more difficult for a thoughtful man to hold his wife's undivided attention as he discusses the tariff in its various aspects and ramifications than it has been under the filet-crochet regime.—Ohio State Journal.

SUPERSTITION OF GEN. GRANT

Union Commander Believed It Bad Luck to Turn and Retrace His Steps.

The country folk in the vicinity of Grant's boyhood home were as superstitious as was the general run of rural people in that day. One thing grew out of these notions that fixed itself permanently in the mind of the youthful Grant that had, no doubt, marked effect on his later life.

He says that he came firmly to believe that it meant bad luck for one to turn round and retrace his steps when on a journey. One night, with impunity return home without reaching his intended destination, but he must do it by another road—not the same one he traveled in going.

This feeling may have had something to do with his entrance at West Point. It is commonly known that his appointment was not of his choosing, but that of his father. Grant himself hung back and had to be pressed to go to the academy. Even after he was well on his way—at Philadelphia and New York—he sincerely hoped that some accident might happen that would make his return imperative. But he would not turn round and retrace his steps.

The feeling seems to have grown gradually into set rule with him that after having set out to go anywhere, or to do anything, he must go to the end of the thing, and there must be no such thing as turning back. That was characteristic of his course in the Civil war when he rose to positions in which he had supreme decisions to make.

The only time in his life when he seemed near to breaking in on this rule was when, after the Mexican war, he decided to resign from the army and change the whole course of his life up to that time. But for the Civil war that called him back, it is likely that he would hardly have been heard from again.

SHUTTING UP THE STORE

Visitors to South America Surprised to Find the Shops Closed at Night.

It is rather surprising to the foreigner visiting South American countries for the first time to find most of the best and prettiest shops almost hermetically sealed at night. If the building is of the older style of construction the heavy shutters are closed and locked by iron bars; if a more modern building, the flexible sliding doors and windows are completely drawn, and the passer-by can see nothing within the shop.

All is darkness save the light of the street lamps; no brilliantly-lighted windows help to add cheer and brightness to the street.

In European and American cities the average merchant is willing to spend money freely for nightly display of his wares and merchandise. He realizes and appreciates the publicity. The evening crowds upon our streets are highly entertained and even instructed by window displays of the busy streets.

Herein lies the difference; for, as a rule, the South American streets, busy and attractive during the day, are quite the reverse at night. Even in some of the larger cities the old custom of hermetically sealing the shop at night prevails.

How Times Have Changed.

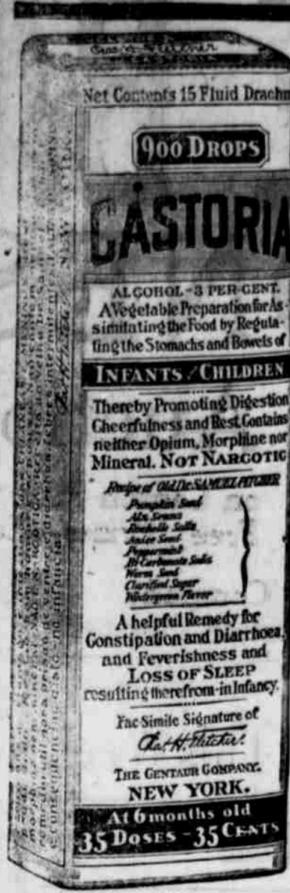

It was raining heavily the other day when one of the uptown public schools was dismissed. In front of the school, waiting for the children, were nurses, mere parents, chauffeurs and relatives, and all of them were burdened with umbrellas, overshoes, raincoats and wraps. As the children came out they were bundled up and hurried away. An old man with a clay pipe upside down thrust between his teeth stood watching the picture while the rain splashed his damp person. "Covering 'em up like plants," he said. "Overshoes, umbrellas and the like. Say, when I was a boy this rain would have been good for us. We did not have any shoes, let alone overshoes, and as for umbrellas, why, we'd punch the kid's eye that would use one. Oh, well," he sighed, philosophically, "times change."—New York Times.

Use of Glycerin.

For bad bruises—mix five spoonfuls of glycerin and one spoonful of subacetate of lead. Shake up in a bottle and keep corked. Apply some on a piece of lint and cover with a bandage. For coughs—A small teaspoonful of glycerin should be swallowed slowly. Those who dislike the sweetness of glycerin may mix it with a little lemon or orange juice, or even vinegar.

Thought He Was Reading.

Margaret was not accustomed to the saying of grace. One night she went for supper with the next-door neighbors. "Daddy," said she the next morning, "what was that for, South read off the platter?"—New York Eve-
