

Stubborn Case

"I was under the treatment of two doctors," writes Mrs. R. L. Phillips, of Indian Valley, Va., "and they pronounced my case a very stubborn one, of womanly weakness. I was not able to sit up, when I commenced to take Cardui.

I used it about one week, before I saw much change. Now, the severe pain, that had been in my side for years, has gone, and I don't suffer at all. I am feeling better than in a long time, and cannot speak too highly of Cardui."

Selecting a Dairy Cow.

Away on the other side of the world—that is, in Australia—in the city of Sydney, there is a good newspaper called the Farm Journal. As we read it, we realize anew the unity of the race and the uniformity of the laws on which agricultural success is based. The Australian Farm Journal is preaching to its readers, as a new doctrine, the value of "cowpeas" in any scheme of farming, just as Home and Farm has been doing for many years. Australia is a great grazing and a great grain country. It is a great dairy country, and here are the rules laid down by the Sydney Farm Journal for "selecting the dairy cow"—just as good here in America as in Australia:

The ideal type of a dairy cow is not large, but bone and muscular, long between the nose and eyes, with a good jaw and broad muzzle.

A bright and prominent eye denotes brain power, and strong nerve force, which are both essential points to be observed in selecting a dairy cow.

A good, clean-cut neck and a retreating brisket shows refinement in breeding and staying qualities in the dairy.

The backbone should not be too straight, but slightly depressed behind the shoulders.

As far as a good type of a dairy cow is concerned, all breeds are of similar types; but all great performers have some certain, well fixed characteristics that distinguish them as dairy animals.

No man can select good dairy cows every time, for there are many internal defects of which there are no outward appearances.

Form, however, is the best known guide to select by.

She should have a good, deep body, showing a large capacity for eating and digesting a large amount of food.

She should have a good, broad chest and large heart girth, affording plenty of lung capacity.

She should have a strong loin, with prominent hips, that are wide apart, showing plenty of room for the organs of maternity.—Home and Farm.

Resting Days.

Were it not for the resting days and periods of relaxation which men enjoy they would speedily become marauding physical weaklings. Sunday commends itself to every wise person because of the great moral, religious and other benefits it confers upon man. It frees him from an unending round of drudgery and imparts a sense of manhood which otherwise would be lacking.

But in these whirligig days of intense living and high pressure business, a weekly rest is not enough. To some it may be, but to the great majority it is not and to them the advent of hot weather brings the call of the woods and lakes, of ocean and mountain. And there is wisdom in the call and even greater wisdom in the response, for the call is nature's invitation to recuperate nerves and minds faded by months of steady application to work.

A Womanly Woman.

No one of God's creations is more beautiful than a womanly woman. These are some of the things that mark true womanhood:

The womanly woman will cultivate reserve; a low, well-modulated voice; quiet refinement in manner; a cheery smile,

She will think before she acts and she will gauge her actions to suit the exigencies of the occasion.

She speaks ill of no one; neither is she a rumor monger or a gossip.

To her friends she is loyal; she knows the value of a friend, and to her highest ideals she is true.

She writes nothing that she may regret—she speaks truth and she is brave.

She cares for her body as God's temple, and her mind is as free from soil. She knows that nothing is more undignified than a display of anger and never in wrath does she raise her voice.

And best of all, she knows that to love and to be loved is her birthright, if she is but worthy of love. Knowing this, she keeps herself worthy of the best love—the love of a gentleman.

Romance of a Book.

A copy of Benjamin Franklin's "Dissertation on Liberty and Necessity," which was printed in 1875 and sold at that time for the small sum of half a crown, was sold recently for $5,000 at a London dealer's.

A romantic history is associated with this book. It is believed that only about 100 copies of the original "Dissertation on Liberty and Necessity" were printed. The edition was suppressed, and the volume sold at Sotheby's and one other are the only remaining copies known.

About 50 years ago Henry Stevens, founder of the firm of Messrs. Henry Stevens, of Great Russell street, London, bought this copy for a small sum.

He then offered it to the British museum for $10 but it was declined on account of the price. Next the book was offered to two famous collectors for $50, but was again refused on account of the price. It was sold at auction for $75, and again in 1872 for $125. It is an ironic fact that at both of the sales representatives of the British museum were unsuccessful bidders.

The Fountain Head.

Robert Henri, the well-known artist of New York, was laughing about an art hoax that had been practiced in Paris on an American millionaire.

"Millionaires of that type are so easily hoaxed," he said "They are so ignorant of art.

"I hear recently of an elderly millionaire who was taking his young wife abroad to have her portrait painted.

"But why don't you try home talent?" someone asked him.

"Oh, he answered, 'we've tried home talent in vain. Now we're going to see what the genuine old masters can do.'"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Happy Man.

The happiest man in the world is the common, everyday pay chap who makes his own living, pays his own bills and has the respect of his neighbors. He saves a little money as he goes along, but he does not try to get a corner on his local output and he is not a slave to ambition or society. He never expects to wear out his trousers in the senate, and when he glides out of bed in the morning he never wastes any time to pick out the right tint of socks, suspenders and necktie that will blend with the general effect. He only wears a high collar when he feels like it, and when his pet corn begins to hurt, he jerks out his knife and cuts a four inch gash in the side of his shoe and nothing is said about it in the local papers. He never has to sit up at night to poultice his conscience. He believes in the doctrine of live and let live. When he encounters one of the needy he doesn't stutter with his pocket book. The plain plug of a man is happy because he is satisfied and doesn't spend half of his time yearning for something which his salary will not permit. Give us more plain men and the world will be better.—Newport Times.

Misplaced confidence isn't always the result of being absent minded.

Many a woman never knows her own mind because she has never had a formal introduction to it.

Many a fellow has put up a bluff with a girl only to have her throw him over.

No woman can manage a man if she lets him know she is doing it.

When an opportunity fails it may be because it has picked out the wrong man.
