Elkataka School Entertainment.
The school at Elkataka closed last Friday with a grand entertainment and Christmas tree, which was a delight to those who attended. The tree was served at the Kessler Chapel, north of the depot, and was considered a success in every particular. South Strong's school and Rev. Morton's Sunday school attended in joint session, and were never more highly entertained than when they received the many prizes, luxuries and gifts, which showed the wise superintending of the two teachers.
The entertainment was given at the school house and was attended by the largest audience that ever assembled at a similar entertainment at Elkataka. It was opened by prayer by Rev. Morton, followed by the school singing the beautiful song, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." The exercises lasted for three hours, and good order prevailed. The fruits of these entertainments have proven to be to our little children "as bread cast upon the waters," and we highly recommend them to the teachers of our beloved county.

NOTICE.
To Whom It May Concern: Through the kindness of THE BREATHITT COUNTY NEWS we introduce ourselves to its readers in the vicinity of Lost Creek, because we wish to open up a school at that place.
G. E. Drushal, Ph. B., who is a graduate of Ashland College, Ashland, O., '05, in the Philosophical course, a course equivalent to any classical course in any standard college, will teach.
Mrs. Ada Drushal, who was within one year of graduation in the same college, will assist in teaching.
Second condition. All that we demand for our services this year are:
1. That fuel be provided for heating the room.
2. That the school house be repaired so that it can be comfortably heated and other necessary improvements be made about the building.
3. That some one build fires and keep the room swept.
This is to be a special school and only those who are now in or above the fourth reader grade, or at least twelve years old, will be admitted. All ordinary branches will be taught and if enough for a class for advanced work, we will be glad to teach it.
School will be held four days every week, Tuesday, Wednesday Thursday and Friday, beginning Tuesday, January 16, 1906.

The January Delineator.
The Delineator begins the New Year with an attractive cover and a display of all that is new in the fashion world, to say nothing of the many features of literary excellence. Of particular interest is an article by Postmaster-General Cortelyou, describing woman's place and share of work in the postal service. The article in the "Safe Food" series is devoted to a discussion of the real value of glucose as a food product. Cecilia Loftus gives her impression of "Ophelia" a character which she has acted with success, and N. Hudson Moore writes of "Old-Fashioned Beds." "The President of Quex," Helen M. Winslow's club story, is continued, a serious note being introduced in the discussion of child labor. "At Spinas Farm" is concluded, as well as John Luther Long's clever story of the stage, "Castles in Spain." The education of the child is the subject of a thoughtful paper by Dr. Grace P. Murray, and the pastimes for little folks include the first of a series of fairy tales by Alice Brown. The various departments are filled with matter of interest and value to the woman of the home.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ROUSSEAU.
Joseph Walters is moving his mill this week.
Dial Williams and Jacob Calhoun are visiting friends in Knott county.
Wiley Gillum and wife, of Jackson, were here last week looking for a farm they wish to buy.
Alson Spencer, while off-bearing lumber from a saw, got the end of his middle finger cut off.

Land buyers will be here in a few days to receive deeds and pay up. No one is afraid to buy or sell now, for the Lord said something about a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelt righteousness, and the people of Rousseau believe that Breathitt county for the next four years will be compared to that event.

Christmas and New Year passed off very quietly at this place, with the exception of some shooting at the Christmas tree, on Ivy Patch. There were a few entertainments and social gatherings, which were enjoyed very much. It is a good thing to observe Christmas day, but there is a better thing than observing Christmas day, and that is keeping Christmas. If we keep Christmas as we should, we must forget what we have done for others and remember what other people have done for us. We must stoop down and consider the needs and desires of the little children, to remember the weakness and loneliness of people who are growing old, to trim our lamps so they will give more light and less smoke, to make a grave for our ugly thoughts and a garden for our kind feelings, with the gate open. Believe that the blessed life, which began in Bethlehem, more than nineteen hundred years ago is the image and brightness of eternal love; then you can keep Christmas.

EVERSOLE.
"Few Clothes" will visit friends and relatives in Wolfe county in the near future.

Miss Lou E. Rose was quietly married at the home of her brother, J. C. Rose, Sunday before Christmas, to Haden Reynolds, of Cow Creek.

Your correspondent closed his school last Friday. Mrs. Randall Amburgy gave him and his school a dinner, and a good one too; also a dance at night.

During the course of a Christmas dinner at the home of Matt Barrett, on Lynem's Creek, near Beattyville, a fight took place which resulted in the death of James Roberts, the son-in-law of Barrett, and the probable fatal wounding of Barrett himself. Barrett had invited a number of relatives to his home on Christmas day, and it is reported that a heated conversation arose at the table when Roberts accused Barrett of bad treatment while he was visiting Barrett's daughter prior to their marriage. The conversation reached a bitter stage when, it is said, Roberts arose from the table, drew a knife and stabbed Barrett three times. Jesse Barrett, a son of the wounded man came into the room after the altercation, and it is reported he secured a shotgun, which others present sought to prevent him from using. In the scuffle that ensued the gun was discharged, but no one was hurt. Jesse Barrett then secured another gun and while he held the others at bay shot and instantly killed Roberts.

COPE BRANCH.
The infant child of George Spencer, of Oakdale, died Christmas day.

H. S. Chapman and wife, of Quicksand, visited relatives here Sunday and attended Sunday school and church. We have a large attendance of children each Sunday and would be glad for more old people to come and study the word.

There was a Xmas entertainment at the Lost Creek school house, and the Sunday school here and at Big Branch were pleasantly surprised by a treat from the superintendent. There were a large number of children present at both schools and all went away with lots of candy and a light heart.

The U. S. Geological Survey will make a complete survey of the coal fields of Breathitt and adjoining counties early in the spring. This will mean the initial step in the development this section.

Our combination offers are for the benefit of our old as well as new subscribers.

Wm. Risner, commonly known as "Stinger," died at his home near Hendricks, Magoffin county, last week. He was 94 years of age and probably the oldest man in the county. When 25 years old he broke the record as being the swiftest barefoot runner of his day by catching a red fox on a run.

Campton was visited by a fire early last Saturday morning. The building recently erected by the Masonic lodge and the office of the Campton Courier was destroyed, as were several other business and dwelling houses. The fire was caused by the explosion of natural gas. Loss, $25,000.

Mrs. Henry Watson, wife of Henry Watson, manager of the Jackson telephone exchange, declined to dance with John Flaherty at a Catholic dance at Mt. Sterling, whereupon Flaherty drew a revolver and fired, the bullet passing through her lungs. Flaherty was hurried to the jail at Lexington to prevent a mob from lynching him.

Bob Taylor's Magazine opens the new year in the same bright, happy vein which characterizes all the work of its genial Editor-in-Chief. Although engaged in a stirring campaign for the United States Senate, Gov. Taylor finds time amid his multitudinous duties to contribute each month his quota of "Sunshine and Moonshine." "The Fiddle and Bow," probably the most popular of the Governor's lectures is being reprinted in monthly installments.

ONLY A COWBOY

Nina Leighton had gone to teach school in the west. Ward Cameron, Harvard graduate, had seen her and had formed the crazy idea of passing himself off as an uncouth cowboy and going to school to her.
He assumed the role with great success, and, though he seemed the greatest possible idiot in matters of book learning, yet in the months that followed Nina found that her heart was no longer her own. Here is a letter which Cameron wrote to his old chum, Ross Raymond:
"I have just passed through an experience that I would not have repeated for the half of my fortune, an experience which nearly cost me my darling Nina—don't laugh, old fellow, for it came to that long ago—her life. Early this morning I mounted Victor and started for a hunt, intending to be out all day. Soon after noon I became aware that a storm was brewing and immediately turned my steed's head homeward.
"I had proceeded only a short distance when I was compelled to seek shelter beneath the thick foliage of a gigantic oak. There I sat for three long hours, watching with interest the pouring rain. At last the clouds broke away, and I found as I rode along through the forest, directing my course toward the high road, that the frost had forced the creek, which in dry weather is a mere rivulet, far beyond its banks.
"Suddenly there came, louder than the torrent's roar, the sound of crashing timbers, mingled with a cry of distress. Urging Victor on, I soon witnessed a scene that seemed to freeze the very blood in my veins.
"The rushing waters had forced the bridge that spanned the creek from its hold and borne it away upon the rapid current, and, Ross, imagine, if you can, my feelings—but, no, that would be impossible—when I saw Nina Leighton standing upon it!
"Fortunately my weekly explorations of that locality in search of game had acquainted me with my surroundings, which, together with the discovery that the railing on one side of the bridge had been broken off, leaving a single post standing, enabled me to quickly determine upon a course of action.
"As the bridge passed me I shouted: "Courage, Nina! Cling to the railing that remains, and I will save you at the bend."
"Then began the race for life. With the speed of a deer my noble Victor bounded along the bank, leaping over fallen trees and ditches. With joy I found upon nearing the bend that my side of the creek was almost clear of trees, also that the current's strength was spent against the opposite bank.
"Victor had won the race. Soon, however, the bridge, with the slender form of poor Nina standing like a statue upon it, her face the hue of death, her eyes riveted upon me, swept by.
"I will catch the post with my lasso and gallop along with you to the bend and be ready to draw the bridge ashore. Brace yourself firmly, I called.
"With a whizzing sound my lariat cut the air and settled around the post. As we approached the bend I spurred Victor forward, then, wheeling him suddenly to the right of a large tree, brought him back on his haunches. The noble fellow grandly sustained the trial of his strength as stronger and stronger came the strain on the lariat until the headlong course of the frail raft was entirely checked. After grounding it and securing the lasso I soon had the unconscious form of Nina Leighton safe in my arms."
"The rays of the setting sun fell upon Nina seated near the parlor window. And who was the elegant and well-dressed stranger she saw coming up the path? There was something strangely familiar to her in his appearance, yet—it could not be! Ah, but it was! For in a moment her hands were clasped in those of the visitor, and she was gaining into the roughish face of Ward Cameron.
"And how is my little teacher after her unpleasant adventure?" he mischievously asked, smiling down upon her.
"Unable to bear the quizzical expression of those dark eyes and the rush of memories Ward's questions brought her, she covered her face with her hands as she faltered:
"Then you are not an ignorant cowboy, after all."
"Well, no, not exactly, since I am a graduate of old Harvard," replied Ward coolly. "Miss Leighton—Nina," he earnestly continued as he knelt at her side and drew the hands from her blushing face, "I plead your pardon for my wicked deception. Hearing much praise of the little teacher from my Aunt Helen, I masqueraded as I did through pure love of fun."
"For shame, sir!" pouted Nina, with burning cheeks. "Think of my patient endeavors to educate a Harvard graduate!"
"Sweetheart, I have learned a lesson so dangerously fascinating that I cannot unlearn it. And now," dropping the imprisoned hands and drawing the girl's form toward him, "since you have taught the ignorant cowboy to love you will you not be his wife?"
"You saved my life today, Ward. It is yours," she whispered as she tremulously turned to meet her lover's kiss.—New York Journal.

Frank Avowal.
Old Uncle Steve, a typical antebellum dandy, loved to sit around the stores and do light errands.
A merchant said to him one day, "Uncle Steve, of all the things you ever did what would rather do?"
Uncle Steve deliberated a moment and said, "Well, Mr. John, I'd love to do it I rather rest."—Lippincott's Magazine.
