TO CONTINUE TO LIVE

In This Country Racing Must Be Moderately Respectable

Below we give extracts from an editorial in the Courier-Journal of March 8:

"According to Jacksonville, Fla., dispatches, the fight against the bookmakers at Monerief Park has begun. It will end in all probability, as such fights have ended in other States.

"The shortsightedness of the racing men who hope to keep 'the game' alive in the United States by shifting the base of gambling operations from one State to another, wearing out their welcome first in one and then in another, is a remarkable feature of the turf.

"It should be plain by this time that racing in this country must be moderately respectable to continue to live. As the turfmen in Kentucky have been wise enough to take steps to improve the reputation of the sport by subordinating the speculative feature and ousting the bookmakers from the tracks, the prospects for prosperous meetings and clean sport to continue are bright. The Latonia, Ky., authorities, before that track changed hands, believed in the old-time policy of fighting popular sentiment with legal technicalities and continuing the reign of the bookmakers so long as that might be possible. That policy doubtless owed its existence to the fact that the gamblers controlled and were making a self-preservation fight. Fortunately for the Kentucky turf, they were defeated.

"Bookmakers were eliminated at Churchill Downs, Louisville, before it became necessary, as a result of the rulings of the courts, to do so. Experience has proven that the professional layer of odds and professional fixer of races is not essential to the continuance of racing in Louisville.

"Racing thoroughbreds has been a sport of kings and commoners since the dawn of civilization. Thothmes I., of the Eighteenth Egyptian dynasty, was as proud of bringing Arabian horses into Africa as of having conquered Mesopotamia. King Solomon paid fancy prices for thoroughbreds. The Greeks gave the horse a position of honor in the Olympic games five or six centuries before the birth of Christ. Rome held racing in esteem, and Edward VII., of England, keeps up the traditions of his ancestors by maintaining a 'string.'

"Like many old families, racing has not been as respectable from its beginnings to the present time as it might have been. But, just as there is less tolerance nowadays of the scion of an ancient family if his 'performance' is not up to his pedigree, there is little patience with racing when it boasts glorious traditions, but does not seek to live up to them. The tracks of the future in the United States must show cause why they should exist, or be blotted out, unless an unlooked-for change of public sentiment should develop. They must be, primarily, race courses, and not gambling devices.

"Despite the aims and yearnings of the bookmakers, racing is doomed to reasonable respectability or destruction.

"Instead of seeking a scene of operations in a State sufficiently complacent to permit racing of any character, the turf should establish a character sufficiently good to make it welcome in any State. It has improved its reputation in Kentucky. If it had been decided that the Racing Commission had no power to regulate the conduct of meetings held by the old management at Latonia, the present Legislature would assuredly have been asked to enact an anti-racing law, and in all probability it would have done so. The Kentucky turf, which exists, provides an example of how to do it, and that a number of States, which does not longer exist, offers an illustration of how not to do it.

"A century of racing in Kentucky has given a congenial occupation to a class of breeders who compare well in moral and mental attributes and social graces with an equal number of business men. The 'nursery' of thoroughbreds, and the turf, have been picturesque and desirable features of the life of the State. The sport of racing, at its best, has appealed to thousands of men and women who never laid a wager or owned a horse.

"Racing should not be exterminated. Its promoters should provide against disaster by making the ancient sport of kings the sport of modern gentlemen."

"The Responsibilities of the Fortunate."

In Lexington last week before the Lecture Class at the residence of the Misses Brown, Mrs. W. T. Lafferty gave a talk full of appealing charm on the subject of "The Responsibilities of the Fortunate."

First, the right of women to vote was discussed and the injustice done to them in withholding this right. Next, the necessity for the equal franchise and through it of the representation in public affairs of the woman's point of view. Both positions were well taken and copiously illustrated.

Outlining woman's sphere and its changing limitations through the centuries, the speaker then came to the question so often asked: "Is it unwomanly to vote?" To this answer was made that in anything which pertains to the home, its preservation and protection, woman finds, not only her sphere, but her positive duty. And after all what are woman's duties but missionary in character? Her first efforts in public affairs have been along charitable and philanthropic lines. So far from being masculine they are the modern extension of the age-old feminine instinct of compassion.

He Had No Objection.

"We—we want you to marry us," said the blushing young man, indicating a young woman with downcast eyes and smiling face who stood a step behind him.

"Come in," said the minister, and he endeavored to ease their embarrassment for a moment; but soon decided it was useless to try.

"Will you be married with a ring?" he inquired.

The young man turned a helpless gaze on his companion, and then looked at the minister.

"If you've got one to spare and it can come out of the two dollars, I guess she'd like it," he said at last.—National Food Magazine.

May Not Pool.

The proposition to organize a wool pool in Nicholas county this year has failed to meet with success and it is now believed that the 1910 crop will not be pooled.

Auto Truck for the Farm.

The truck farmers of Long Island, who bring their produce to Brooklyn by horsepower, saw one of their number come up from behind and disappear around the curve ahead. This man was running an automobile, and the wagon rolled along at ten or fifteen miles an hour, while the horse-drawn vehicles were making barely four miles. It was the first time that the new method had been applied to the trucking business on Long Island and, furthermore, because it means the eventual eclipse of the horse in hauling garden products into Brooklyn.

Other localities in the United States and Canada have before this grown accustomed to the gasoline-driven farm wagon. In some parts of the West an automobile piled high with farm products is not an uncommon sight.

Eighty-Seven Killed in Avalanche When Train Went Down Mountain.

Eighty-seven people were killed when the great Northern passenger train was swept down an avalanche, according to a revised list given out by the railroad officials at Wellington, Washington, March 5.

A transcontinental train, east-bound, carrying two sleepers full of passengers, which was just behind the great snow slide in Rogers Pass when sixty-two lives were lost, escaped another great slide by a minute, and was held between two mountains of debris.

Where Cats Are Welcome.

The god Ptah is said to be worshipped with ardor in Boston, where the cat is as much a part of the household as any of the members. The Egyptians seemed to think the cat very important to happiness, and Boston can see no good in that class of society that is talking about the cat as a breeder of disease and a destroyer of birds, and not to be tolerated.
