

Court Day Business Small But Active

The crowd at the cattle pens Monday, court day, was far from normal, but was composed of men who were there for business.

There was a great falling off in the number of cattle and will bring down the 1922 court day average to about $,000.

Trade was active and by 3 o'clock in the afternoon the pens were empty. The stock was in fine condition and the number sold was about 1,750.

These cattle, mostly young feeders and steers, sold from $4 to $6.80 per hundred.

Heifers, average in size and weight, made an average of $3 and $4 and up. Cows, not in the best condition, brought a price from 1-2 cents to 4 cents.

Quite a lot of good work mules were offered. Values were measured according to size and sold as follows per head: $60, $75, $135, $140 and one bunch was driven the old way to $150 each.

Not many ponies were offered. They brought $60, $70 and as high as $85. The small one went to the mines.

But very few good horses were priced. We did not see any sales, but good saddle horses brought as high as $150.

Some lines of merchandise sold well. We mention here clothing and shoes. These lines were active as were toys and jewelry.

Hardman Acquitted Of Murder Charge

The jury composed of Lexington and Fayette county men into whose hands was placed the fate of Scobee Hardman, Bourbon county youth, charged with the murder of Leon Renaker, brought in a verdict at 10:16 o'clock this morning of "not guilty."

The case went to the jury at 10:10 o'clock last night and the jury was summoned by Judge Shackelford at midnight, asking for a report. They had been unable to agree and, showing the strain of the long day in the court room, asked to retire, which request was granted.

The trial of Scobee Hardman, following the brutal murder of Leon Renaker, wealthy Winchester poultry dealer, which occurred at his home last July, has been one of the most widely discussed cases tried in Kentucky in years.

Leon Renaker was well known in this city, where he lived when a small boy when his father was associated in the poultry business with the late Thomas Heinrich.

It is said that the general opinion prevailed in Winchester that Hardman was the guilty man, but the commonwealth certainly made a very weak case and the verdict was a foregone conclusion with those that had kept up with the court proceedings.

Rum Bandits Raid Bond Bros. House

Bandits removed 430 gallons of liquor from Bond Brothers' distillery near Lawrenceburg, Anderson county, Saturday morning after securely tying and gagging Lester Tinsley, distillery guard. The whisky was taken away in an automobile truck and Tinsley was not discovered bound until 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon when the relief guard reported for duty.

Several hours later William Perry, chief of police at Shelbyville, as he scanned the motor traffic of that city noted a speeding automobile truck loaded with tobacco. The truck was stopped and prompted by a suspicion that the tobacco had been loaded too carefully for ordinary purposes, the police chief conducted a search which revealed a quantity of whisky valued at $16,000.
