FACTORY LOADED SHOTGUN SHELLS.

It's not sentiment—that makes the most successful shots shoot Winchester Factory Loaded Shells. It's the results they give. It's their entire reliability, evenness of pattern and uniform shooting. Winchester "Leader" shells, loaded with smokeless powder, are the best shells on the market. Winchester "Repeater" shells loaded with smokeless powder are cheap in price but not in quality. Winchester "New Rival" black powder shells are the favorite black powder load on the market on account of their shooting and reloading qualities. Try either of these brands and you'll be well pleased. They are THE SHELLS THE CHAMPIONS SHOOT.

THE LITTLE HOMESTEAD.

A Story of Heartfelt Interest—A Play With a Moral.

"The Little Homestead" tells a touching story of human interest—a story with a moral forcibly told and beautiful in its pathos. It appeals to the finer sensibilities, raises the emotions of indignation, sorrow, pity and applauds righteousness triumphant. It is a story which makes one better for the knowing, yet a tale of such dramatic force and virility that interest is heightened by every word, every situation.

The quaint New England setting is a fitting atmosphere with which to surround the characters. It is homelike, simple, real. There stands the little homestead, a counterpart of which is graven on many a heart and about it are the true characters of every day life, who each adds his or her quota in the unfolding of the touching and dramatic picture.

One feels at home by that fireside with the devoted young husband and handsome wife; shudders at the entrance of the villain who crosses the happy threshold and strikes at its sanctity; sorrows at the frailty of the wife who in a moment of blind infatuation succumbs to the wiles of the destroyer; weeps with the disconsolate husband and finds hope in the little ill-shaped cripple to whom the wife has been kind and who now knows that his deformed being was created for a purpose. Pathos pervades when the doors of the homestead are closed upon the wife and the home destroyed.

The sorrow and suffering which follows the unhappy woman to squalid apartments and to drunken abuse from the man with whom she has cast her lot, are relieved by the appearance of the husband who hopes to again lead her back to paths of right. The threats of death by the brutal paramour have no terror for the wronged husband. The little cripple again sees and knows. It is his hand that rids the homestead of its destroyer.

Then out of the blinding New England blizzard comes the remorseful wife to the little homestead—to die. The ruddy blaze of the fireside lights upon her face, made sweet by suffering. She hears her husband call her wife, hears his forgiveness and in her little homestead passes to rest.

With its realistic settings and capable interpretation by an unusually talented company, the story of "The Little Homestead" goes straight to the heart. This will be the attraction at the Capital Theatre on February 26th.

A wholesome drama with a moral to teach, and with the home as its center, is a healthful form of entertainment. In "The Little Homestead" is found such a one—a play abounding in heart interest, thrilling in dramatic force and beautiful in its sweet surroundings of New England life.

VOGEL'S MINSTRELS.

John W. Vogel, of the Big Minstrels, is a man after Benjamin Franklin's own heart, and lives up to the motto: "If you want a thing well done do it yourself." Now that he is successful he does not bask in the inviting enticement of indolence and delegate the charge of his troubadours to a subordinate. On the contrary the master mind in minstrelsy commands the combined forces in person, and will be seen in front when the band begins to play for the noonday parade, announcing the performance at the Capital Theatre.

"ARIZONA."

Much interest will attach to the engagement at the Capital Theatre of Augustus Thomas' new play "Arizona," which comes Tuesday, March 1.

When Augustus Thomas wrote "Alabama" the ablest critics in America said he had written the best American play. On the morning of September 11, three of the best newspaper critics in New York declared "Arizona" a greater play than "Alabama." The logical inference is evident. "Arizona," as the name would indicate, is a stage-story of the lives and loves of men and women living in that picturesque section of our national domain, which is now knocking at the doors of Congress with the demand for the dignity of Statehood. The characters are typical of the sturdy civilization of a new country. Canby, a splendid old ranchman, who dominates the Aravapia Valley; his kind-hearted, but peppery-tempered wife; their two beautiful daughters, children of the plains, veneered with San Francisco culture; the officers and soldiers of a frontier cavalry post—these are the principal types that move and live in a play said to be one of the best contributions to the American stage since Bronson Howard and Dion Boucicault laid the cornerstone of that institution's foundation.

The scenes of the play are on a ranch close to the Mexican border and Fort Grant, one of the United States military posts, established primarily to keep the Indians in a passive condition. The dramatic motive is simple, and the complications which lead to the denouement rational. The young wife of the colonel, many years her senior, being wearied to the point of despair by her lonely life has a passing spasm of romance and is on the verge of elopement with a most transparent villain, when the young lover of her sister foils the plan, but at such a critical moment that he must himself bear the burden of suspicion or reveal the wife's frailty to her husband, who has been to him almost as a father. With genuine manliness he chooses to shield the woman and awaits the future for his justification. By thus sealing his lips, he innocently develops a series of crises that are highly tragic, and eventually a catastrophe that halts the movement of every corpse. But when it is all over, and the sun breaks through the heavy clouds, one feels that in every step of the matter his judgment was sound and his conduct gallant and heroic.

Don't fail to witness the last performance of the Howard-Dorset Company at Capital Theatre to-night. "The Innocent Sinner" will be the bill.
