Two True Stories.

The Piscatorial Prevaricators' association was in session.

"I was fishing for cod off the Banks one day some years ago," said one, "when I dropped my watch overboard. The next year I went fishing at the same place. I caught a whopping big fellow and found my watch inside of him. It was running steadily, the action of the fish's liver having kept it wound up. But it was five hours fast. The only way that I can account for it is that the fish crossed the Atlantic, staid on the other side long enough to get the time over there, and that I caught him too soon after he got back to allow the watch to regulate itself."

"I was fishing for trout in Pennsylvania last fall," said another member, "in company with my nephew, who is an inveterate cigarette smoker. We landed a ten pounder and allowed him to flounder around in the bottom of the boat while we cast again, because they were biting freely. My nephew had just thrown a lighted cigarette in the boat, and in some way this trout got it, put it in his gills and smoked it. The cigarette seemed to have a soothing effect on him. I brought the trout home, taught him to smoke a pipe, and when we killed him Christmas I served up to my guests something that I believe has never been served up before—self smoked trout. It was great too."

Supplied Another.

At a dinner in Rottingdean a Royal academician stated to the company the curious fact that sugar and sumac are the only two words in English where su is pronounced as shu.

There was much interest shown in the discovery, when Rudyard Kipling was heard from the other end of the table, "But are you quite sure?"

The sword of Sir William Wallace is in the Wallace tower, a stone structure in Strirling, two miles from the castle. It is a two edged sword of massive proportions and great weight, and it is said four strong men are required to wield it.
