A WOMAN.

You say that you are but a woman—
Who are so very wonderful to me.
You tell me there is little you can do,
Little indeed that all the world can see.

The Blush of Ma-Tha-Nee

IT WAS night and the hour was late, but Mr. Beauville paid no attention to the most beautiful of the Antilles, grows a plant which bears a huge spike of crimson flowers.

AND WITH THAT CRY SHE LEAPED OUT OVER THE BRINK OF THE CLIFF.

the legend of the Me-tha-nee (which name means "The Mountain's Pride") still lives.
Me-tha-nee was the loveliest maiden of Xamayca ("the Land of Many Streams," in the Arawak tongue).

asleep, Me-tha-nee remained, cowering upon the clay floor of the temple and weeping for Tlutoo, until even she was wearied and fell asleep.

She had slept until it was almost the time of sunrise when she heard a voice that seemed to come from the mouth of the great stone image, saying, "Me-tha-nee, go not from this house."

Now, Me-tha-nee feared the temple, because of Quaco, the priest, and she only staid in it through that night because she thought that Tlutoo's dead body made it safe. So when she heard the voice she trembled and listened.

Again the voice said: "Me-tha-nee, go not from this house. Thou shalt be the bride of the gods."

At that she screamed aloud: "Tlutoo save me!"

But as the dead body of Tlutoo did not hear her cry, she sprang up from the floor of the temple. And immediately the stone image of the god fell down and broke, and Quaco, who had hidden himself in it, rushed out upon Me-tha-nee. She, finding that the spirit of her bridegroom was not near his body—or he would have answered her cry—turned and ran toward the sun, which was just rising over the edge of the cliff.

And as Me-tha-nee ran, crying: "Tlutoo, save me!" Quaco ran after her, arousing all the village with a cry that the woman had broken the image of his god and was trying to escape punishment.

But she ran on until she came to the edge of the cliff, where she faced the rising sun, and, lifting up both her hands, as one who prays to the heavenly gods, cried aloud once more: "Tlutoo, save me!" And with that cry she leaped out over the brink of the cliff.

Presently Quaco and the people of the village reached the place from which she had leaped, and they looked down to see where Me-tha-nee had been dashed to pieces. Far down they saw what seemed a great splash of blood, and when they went down, clambering fearfully, and looked more closely, behold! it was a new and altogether strange crimson flower, more splendid than any kind of flower they had ever seen.

AT THE SEASHORE.

How Two Stout Old Ladies Had a Surf Bath Without Going Into the Water.

"Individuality and personal vanity shrink in the presence of the great ocean," remarked a Detroit clergyman's wife, who had just returned from the seashore, relates the Detroit Free Press, "and the performance of average humanity at a large bathing resort are intensely interesting. People forget themselves and do all sorts of funny things. Sitting on the beach at Ocean Grove the other day watching the bathers, I saw two stout ladies in bathing suits come trotting down near the water; they were both quite elderly—nearly 80 I should say—and I wondered that they felt strong enough to go into the surf unattended.

But, bless you, the two dear old bodies—as much like two elderly infants as anything else—had no idea of battling with the waves. They sat down at the ocean's edge and rested a bit. How droll they looked in the funny little skirts, blouses and straw hats of the sea shore costume. One of them carried a large glass fruit jar, and it occurred to my idly curious mind that she was going to pack it full of sea sand to carry home in her trunk. But, no. In a few minutes she got up, trotted to the sea, filled the jar with water, trotted back, and emptied it over the head of the other lady, who gasped and sputtered, but said it was delightful. The shower bath, of course, ran down over her shoulders, wetting her thoroughly.

"This process was repeated three times; then the nice old lady who had had her hand-made ocean bath arose and the other sat down to enjoy her ocean dip, conveyed to her in the same way. She, too, seemed to enjoy the salt water hugely. After it was all over, they trotted back together to the bath house, to get dressed in time for luncheon."

COLLEGE FOR WOMEN.

Develops Them Physically as Well as Mentally in These Modern Times.

With the increased study of the subject of physical culture there has come to women, as well as to men, a greater respect for a sound body and much clearer knowledge as to how far muscular strength is to be regarded as an indication of robust health. There has been a mad rush into the realm of physical development. Fifteen years ago it was the gymnasium and its apparatus which attracted the greatest attention, says Woman's Home Companion. Men exercised various muscles, and sometimes developed themselves into startling freaks. Then came a reaction in favor of outdoor sports, and it is to this reaction that much good may be attributed. The process was similar with the physical development of girls, and to-day the planning of both is for a more satisfactory effect. Fresh air, moderation, pleasure and interest are fundamental alike for men and women in the promotion of health through physical development. One cannot but be impressed with the greater proportion of fine, healthy girls and women one now meets at school and college. The day of the pale, fragile girl, subject to faints, who was once the type, has given place to the reign of the out-of-door beauty, whose attraction comes from health and the high spirits incident to its enjoyment. The evolution of such women can easily be measured from the methods of sport now in vogue in many of our large colleges for women.

WHAT THE FISH SAID.

Charlie Was Right on the Spot When Conundrums Were to Be Answered.

Five-year-old Charlie developed a great fondness for conundrums and puzzles, anything that required serious thought and discovery, and he displayed a startling astuteness in thinking out original answers to well-known queries. He was continually astonishing his mother and his family by the oddity and quaintness of his remarks, relates an exchange.

Especially was he fond of having stories told him, and every night at bedtime the penance of going to bed was compensated for by an original story, a feat that sorely taxed the imagination of his mother. One night the story was about a fishing expedition with imaginary accessories to make it interesting. In the midst of the story the telephone bell rang, making a little interruption. The story was resumed at the point where the alluring bait was cast into the water, and two little fishes swam up to look at it and concluded that it was worth trying. One of them snapped at it, and found that it was different from what he expected it to be.

"And what do you suppose he said to the other fish, who was looking at him?"

"I know," cried Charlie. "He said: 'Line is busy, call again!'"

ILLINOIS THE BICYCLE STATE.

Manufactures More of the Two-Wheeled Silent Steeds Than Any Other State of the Union.

Illinois is the leading state of the union so far as relates to the manufacture of bicycles, according to a bulletin issued by the census office. Illinois manufactured 28.1 per cent. of the total product for 1900, the number of establishments being 60 and the amount of capital invested $7,694,658. Ohio is the nearest competitor to Illinois, the percentage of the product manufactured in that state being 12.8. The number of establishments in the Buckeye state is 24 and the capital invested is $4,354,576. New York is third on the list, having manufactured 12 per cent. of the product. The number of establishments in the Empire state is 66 and the capital invested $3,326,943. Connecticut, which holds the fourth place, manufactures 11.5 per cent. of the products in its 24 establishments. The Nutmeg state has $4,215,399 invested in this industry. In the United States there are 312 bicycle establishments with a capital of $24,783,659, and the product is valued at $31,915,908.

STUDYING SUGAR PLANTS.

Dr. Wiley of Agricultural Department, Making Some Interesting Experiments.

Dr. Wiley, chemist of the agricultural department, is making some interesting experiments in sugar producing plants on the farm in the Potomac bottoms, and which are operated by the department. Sugar cane, sorghum, sugar beets, Rocky Ford muskmelons and sugar corn—all sugar producing plants—have been planted side by side, and Dr. Wiley finds they each flourish with equal vigor in this climate. This is in itself a matter of much surprise to scientists, as some of the plants were thought to flourish best in hot climates or near the Atlantic slope, while other sugar producing plants were thought to grow only in cold countries. Dr. Wiley's experiment is not so much to find their adaptability to a temperate climate as to determine the sugar producing qualities of these products and their relative value. For this purpose the plants give every evidence of perfect development in the District of Columbia.

BLOW TO SUBMARINE BOATS.

Adverse Opinion for Naval Officers May Cut Off Appropriation for Further Experiment.

Three important naval officers took such strong grounds against submarine torpedo boats in their present stage of development before the senate naval committee that it is possible no appropriation will be made at this session for the purchase of craft of this type. Rear Admiral Bowles thought it inadvisable to experiment further with the Holland boat, while Admiral Bradford quoted Admiral von Tirpitz, head of the German navy, as saying: "I am so sure that they are of no value that I refuse to waste any more time in experimenting with them." Capt. Sigbee expressed the opinion that it would be well to go slow for the present and not purchase 30 or 40 submarine boats.

St. Louis Relieved.

The St. Louis exposition management must enter into a contract not to open the fair on Sundays before the government will hand over any more funds. Provision in the appropriation bill makes this imperative. St. Louis should be thankful, says the Chicago Inter Ocean, that the government has decided the matter for her.
