CUPID'S SEASON.—What may be termed the marrying season has undoubtedly arrived in Paris. Poets say that Death claims all seasons for his own, but it somehow seems as if Hymen were swayed in favor of some months more than others. May is a marrying month, and so are June and November, December and January, but there are few marriages that take place at any other time at least among the ne plus ultra of people who, if not exactly the salt of the earth, are certainly its pulverized sugar. There are undoubtedly a Spring crop and a Fall crop of matrimonial engagements. The words spoken in jest at summer resorts are sometimes spoken in earnest before the altar when the first snow of Winter begins to fall. So many a ball-room promise has to be redeemed when the buds begin to swell in the gardens. Already the aftermath of the genial spirits, such as the ministers, the florists, the dress-maker and the caterer, who preside over engagements, weddings and love affairs, has begun.
