THE IMPORTANCE OF ACCESSORIES

The Clinging Sashes, Wide Girdles and Tailored Belts Give the Correct Summer Note.

RIBBONS ADD A DASH OF COLOR

New York, July 24, 1914.
 It has been many a long day since accessories have played a more important role in the up-to-date wardrobe than they do in the present season. Separate collars are a necessity, whether made of organdy, sheer linen, embroidery, net, pique or doubled linen. Dame Fashion decrees that they should be worn on coat, suit and dress; improving each, for what is daintier than a bit of fresh white at the neck of a colored blouse, or more softening to the severity of a tailored coat color?

The Cut of This Costume is Accentuated By Its Development in Plain and Fancy Crepe.

These collars are often embroidered and sometimes are made of embroidery flossing cut from a vestee front. When they are made of sheer materials of lawn, organdy, Swiss or handkerchief linen, the edges are picot edged or hemmed and hemstitched. Pique colors are also picot edged and are usually doubled, as are the heavier linen collars.
 With the return of the 1880 styles—the basque and bustle—has come the latter's satellite, the clash. Sashes or ribbon, silk and even of the same fabric as the dress are a most important and charming addition to dresses of mull or organdy, silk or serge.

Handsome broad ribbons are to be had in any number of designs suitable for different kinds of costumes. Louis XV, designs in dainty colors, banded on either edge with a stain stripe or corresponding color or of black, will give the simplest dress of lawn or Swiss an air of dainty charm, while a richly striped or figured ribbon swirled loosely around and securely tacked to a foundation skirt, having a black chiffon tunic or overskirt draped over it, is a method of obtaining variety which famous French dressmakers are using.

The Mexican designs which are following closely in the wake of the Mexican Revolution bid fair to be most popular this fall. Queer silted designs of birds, weird reptiles and cabalistic geometrical figures, in brilliant, but crude combinations of color, appear on ribbons whose trimming possibilities cannot be ignored. A grade made of nine-inch ribbon crushed around the waist, closing with a snappy bow fastened at the back or front will give to a dress of dark blue, brown or black what the bright yellow of the oriole gives to the bird's plumage.

Following closely after the sashes, but used more for severe frocks, are the vest-belts. These are made with vest-like tabs in front and tiny watch-pockets on either side, usually stitched in approved tailor fashion. Made of cloth to match the dress, or in contrasting colors, these are distinctly up-to-date, while made in white these belts are extremely popular.

Other accessories which are certainly practical in giving an old skirt a modern look are the tunics of silk, pleated, gathered, or plain, which are made to be worn over any skirt. These are usually of black or blue

One pleated tunic is rather short, silk and often of plaid or striped silk with the belt about two inches from the top, allowing the upper pleats to flare out around the waist. Another is accordion pleated and cut in deep points. A third type is a tunic of net edged with a box-pleated ruche, which is especially pretty worn over a light-colored dress.

In high favor is the dress combining two colors or fabrics. It is much more popular than the dress of one color or material; therefore in the illustrations I have shown two distinct types, both suitable to either development.

The first shows a dress of coarse green linen and white linen lawn. The front and back of the waist are of green linen and are attached to the white linen sleeves by a narrow beading of embroidery. The collar and vestee are of white linen, hemstitched. Stylish little tabs of green fasten in front, giving a waist-coat effect. Triple flounces of green linen are placed over an underskirt of white linen. Although the combination of heavy and sheer material seems almost incongruous, the effect is distinctly smart.

Among the attractive summer fabrics is a voile-like crepe which has a ratine or boucle crepe. This is especially pretty in white and most effective in combination with a plain white crepe, as shown in the illustration. This costume has several marked characteristics; one is the method of making the sleeves and yoke of the waist of plain crepe, and while the bib-like front and back are of the striped fabric. The U-shaped yoke, which reminds one of a man's shirt-front, is a new and pleasing variation. This costume has several marking long monopoly. It is less trying to the average woman than any other neckline. The long tunic holds undiminished sway, but in this shirt a variation is shown in that the striped tunic is attached to a yoke of plain crepe. Crepe covered buttons fasten the dress from the neck to the bottom of the tunic.

 This model is full of possibilities for the woman who is either making up new frocks or remodeling her old browns to suit the present mode.
 The proper use of buttons, beading, tunics, sashes, belts and the proper combination of materials are the true keynote to bear in mind when selecting either your gown, their trimmings, or the accessories to be worn with them.

KENTUCKY MAN TRAILS STOLEN HORSE 500 MILES.

After driving more than 500 miles in a buggy and spending more than $200 in the search, M. E. Poole, of Roberts, Ky., recovered a horse valued at $125, which was stolen from his home. He found it on Joseph Leonard's farm near Belleville, Ill. Poole told Leonard that his mother, who is ill, was so fond of the horse that its loss made her condition worse, and therefore he had spared an expense in recovering it.
 A man charged with stealing the horse is under arrest at Dixon, Ky. The horse was sold to Henry Stacker, of East St. Louis, Ill., who in turn sold it to Leonard.

THE TELEPHONE QUESTION

In the fall of 1912, a number of citizens of Paris, Ky., subscribers of the Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Company, desiring to have the company install in lieu of the present magneto system a common battery central energy telephone system of the latest type, and also remove a large amount of open wire on cross-arms, placing the telephone circuits in cables and on a part of Main Street, removing poles and wires and placing the conductors underground, signed a petition addressed to the company requesting that this be done. In fact, more than 80 per cent. of all the subscribers in Paris petitioned the company to this effect, at the same agreeing to an increase in the rates. The rates now charged and proposed were as follows:

- Now charged for special line business, $2.75 per month.
- Proposed new business rate, $3.50 per month.
- Present two-party line business rate, $2.00 per month.
- Proposed two-party line business rate, $3.00 per month.
- Present special line residence rate, $1.50 per month.
- Proposed special line residence rate, $2.00 per month.
- Present two-party line residence rate, $1.40 per month.
- Proposed two-party line residence rate, $1.50 per month.

The party line service now furnished is what is known as the Code Signal; that is, when A subscriber on a line calls the central office, B's bell is rung, and vice versa; and when A is called by some one, the bell rings twice, and when B is called, it rings three times. The new party line system will be equipped with Selective Signals and Selective Ringing; that is, when A's bell rings, B is not disturbed, and vice versa; this service being in every respect the same as special line service, except that two parties cannot use the line at the same instant. This is a popular class of service in the cities, being extensively used in Louisville, and in many of the larger cities of the country, as high as 60 per cent. of all the telephones are of this class.

The proposed increase in rates will afford the company an estimated increase in their income of $2,000 which together with what is now being collected would not afford a reasonable profit upon the money actually invested; and mainly for this reason and delays incident to changes in the organization of the Telephone Company the new system has not been installed, but the company is now in a position to carry out this plan. The City Council was recently advised concerning this and the Council now has the matter under consideration, and it may be that a new petition embodying the proposition contained in the first petition will be circulated for the signature of the patrons.

It would be highly desirable for a city the size of Paris to have a more up-to-date, modern telephone equipment.
 The rates for telephones located beyond the city limits, especially the exchange subscribers among the farmers, will be in no wise affected by the proposed change.
 If the people of Paris and the county want the perfect system, now is the time to investigate it. If not the company will continue the old system. (adv.)
