SPECIAL TO WOMEN

The most economical, cleansing and germicidal of all antiseptics is

A soluble Antiseptic Powder to be dissolved in water as needed.
As a medicinal antiseptic for douches in treating catarrh, inflammation or ulceration of nose, throat, and that caused by feminine ills it has no equal. For ten years the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. has recommended Paxtine in their private correspondence with women, which proves its superiority. Women who have been cured say it is "worth its weight in gold." THE JACKASS HONORED

The will of I. M. Cook, probated at Shelbyville, provides that his grave shall be marked by a plain monument "with the image of a jack carved thereon." This is the first time, within our knowledge, that the paternal ancestor of the mule has been honored by being given position upon a monument. But spare the deceased Mr. Cook your thoughtless merriment. He was a breeder of jacks and jennets. As such he learned to appreciate the fine points of the useful animal with the long ears and penetrating voice. He heard and loved the early morning song of the jackass as others hear the mockingbird at sunrise. He exhibited the jackass in all of his peculiar beauty at county fairs and won many a blue ribbon. It is greatly to his credit that he liked the animals to whose breeding he devoted himself. Mr. Cook and his jacks were a constructive factor in Shelby County, where some rattling good mules are produced.

We read once in a Kentucky novel that a certain Confederate General who late in life sought consolation in the bosom of the church, fondly and confidently expected to race his favorite thoroughbred upon the green turf of the Hereafter. Maybe I. M. Cook, late of Shelby County, did not hope to be awakened by the strident notes of the braying jackass instead of Gabriel's horn, but he did wish to give the jackass his due as a friend on earth even if he could not hope to meet him in Paradise.—[Frankfort State Journal.]

UNDERGROUND WATERS OF INDIANA.

Useful Report and Maps Can Be Had From United States Geological Survey.

The underground waters of north-central Indiana and their quality, volume, and chemical characteristics are exhaustively discussed in Water-Supply Paper 254 of the United States Geological Survey. The field investigations on which the report is based were made in order to supply communities, municipalities and water users generally in this region with information as to the quantity, character, distribution, accessibility and proper safeguarding of the available ground-water supplies, which, with the increasing population of surface waters by industry, wastes and a growing population, and becoming more and more important.

North-central Indiana not only includes many closely settled farming and manufacturing centers, but is an area in which there has been extensive development of the oil and gas industries, and hence a particular demand has arisen for reliable information on which to base a proper practice in water-supply development.

Expensive and Useless Drilling
Deep-well drilling should not be attempted without some knowledge of the natural conditions. The geologists and engineers of the Geological Survey know of many wells that have been drilled from 600 to 2,000 feet in depth in places where an expert could have foretold with certainty that little or no water would result. Not infrequently people write to the Survey that they have spent hundreds or perhaps thousands of dollars in drilling to great depths and inquire whether they should go deeper. An examination of the geologic maps or data at hand has more than once brought the reply that the formation being drilled was not water-bearing. As the editor of one newspaper remarks: "There are numerous enterprising gentlemen who are glad to bore as near China as their machinery will reach at so much per foot. The man who wants a well bored frequently has the idea that if he is 'game' enough he will strike water. If there is probably water at 100 feet, of course, there must be more at 2,000 feet, he argues. As a matter of fact, the lowest limit of the water he is looking for may be 100 feet, as any geologist who has investigated might tell him. But the man who is boring the well is primarily a well-borer, so he often encourages the 'game'ness of his mistaken patron. It formerly was necessarily a matter of guess-work, but nowadays it need not be." Report is Distributed Free of Charge.

Water-Supply Paper 254 is a comprehensive report of nearly 300 pages containing maps showing the water-bearing formations and their various depths, a large number of well records, and other useful information. Eighty-three acres in which artesian wells occur were visited and their outlines mapped. Especial attention was given in the field work to the water conditions in communities having public supplies, and recommendations are made in the report as to possible improvements where such supplies are inadequate or show bad sanitary conditions. Copies of the report may be obtained free on application to the Director, United States Geological Survey, Washington, D. C.

CURED OF INDIGESTION.

Mrs. Sadie P. Clawson, Indiana, Pa., was bothered with indigestion. "My stomach pained me night and day," she writes. "I would feel bloated and have headache and belching after eating. I also suffered from constipation. My daughter had used Chamberlain's Tablets and they did her so much good that she gave me a few doses of them and insisted upon my trying them. They helped me as nothing else has done." For sale by all dealers. (adv-july)
