ARCHITECTURE AS A PROFESSION.

"The boy whose skill in drawing or designing inclines him toward architecture as a profession should be warned beforehand that artistic success is difficult, requiring years of earnest effort, and that very few architects grow rich," says an article, "When You Grow Up—Architect?" in the August Boys' Life. "A prominent member of the profession says that the only certainty about an architect's earnings is that he may earn nothing at all, and that the very few men who have made money in the profession have not always achieved a real success as judged by professional ideas. The financial returns are far below those in other professions.

"To attain any marked success a man must have either extraordinary ability or influential connections. Work comes to the young architect through winning competitions or through direct award. A showing of previous work is often required for entrance to competitions, so that beginners are barred. Without patronage or unusual ability the first commissions are hard to get. In the face of these facts, hard work and real talent will usually win an honest living is nothing more, with the additional rewards of pleasant associations, variety of out-door and indoor work, a profession unlimited in possibilities, and the artistic satisfaction which comes from creation and self-expression."

NO LANGUAGE QUITE PURE

Words Expressing New Ideas and New Things Are Passed From Nation to Nation.

If by "a pure language" is meant one that does not contain words adopted from another language, then there are none among civilized nations. A language is not something made to order, and that once made ends there so far as development is concerned. A language grows in many ways. Take modern English for example. It differs considerably from the English of the time of Queen Elizabeth, and it is so different from the language spoken in England at the time of the Norman conquest that could one of those old Saxons come back he would not understand us and we would not understand him. And yet the language he spoke is the basis of modern English. Since the time of the Saxons there has been great growth. The Normans brought in French, and scholars since then have brought in thousands of words derived from Latin and Greek. These are English words today, but the roots from which they sprang are to be found in other and in many cases in older languages. It is because of this that the English vocabulary is so extensive and the language so expressive.

Italian, Spanish and French are largely derived from Latin, which was the language of ancient Rome, and for centuries Rome was the ruler of continental Europe. And the Latins borrowed from the still older Greek.

A living language is always growing. For example, science is introducing new words to express new ideas and to name new things.

TRACING HISTORY OF BED

Many Varieties Have Been Used, Not All of Them Conducive to Healthful Sleep.

Iron beds were first made for ordinary use a couple of hundred years ago, and gradually people saw the advantages of this metal bed, until nowadays they are almost universally in use. The Romans used rough framework beds, interlaced with thongs, although, of course, the idea was much improved upon in the beds of some of the emperors, ornamented with jewels. After the thong-and-framework bed came the first idea of a mattress, in the shape of the "chest bed." This was a kind of shallow box stuffed with dry moss or feathers, and although it must have been comfortable, it must, at the same time, have been extremely insanitary. Later on came the big four-poster canopy bedsteads. These pieces of "sleeping furniture" were hung with curtains which did little else but collect dust and keep away fresh air. One had to be wealthy to sleep at all comfortably in those days, for although there were plenty of vermin about, there was no effective insect-killer. So when the bed of a rich man became infested, he moved to another of his houses, and let the vermin die of starvation. The poor man, with only one house, merely grinned and bore it—or, rather, them.

Inventor of the Letter-Box.

The inventor of the letter-box was Anthony Trollope, the novelist, who was a surveyor of the post office, in England, from 1841 to his retirement from the service in 1867. One sure way of arousing Trollope's ire was to suggest that he neglected his post office work for the sake of his novels. He took, as a matter of fact, an intense pride in his official work, or, as he put it, he had a passion for letters. In his autobiography he enumerated various benefits for which the public had cause to be grateful to him. First came the arrangement by which the people living in little villages could buy postage stamps; secondly, the free and early rural delivery, and the putting up of pillar or letter-collecting boxes. Of that accommodation he says: "In the streets and ways of England I was the originator, having, however, got the authority for the erection of the first at St. Helier, in Jersey."

Caves Always of Interest.

None of the peculiar formations of the earth are more interesting than caves, and many are the adventures that have been had by the explorers of these often mysterious caverns. The very word "cave" seems to have a strong attraction for everybody. Some of the best and most interesting stories have been written about adventures in caves, so they have always been well advertised on library shelves. And then we must remember that caves were the only homes of many people who lived in the undiscovered parts of the world thousands of years ago, and this in itself adds much historical interest to these natural tunnels under the surface of the earth.

Historic Building.

In the older part of the city of Kingston, Canada, is a small frame house which was occupied by Governor Simcoe in 1792-93 immediately after his arrival in Canada. Here he composed the proclamation calling the first parliament of Upper Canada (now Ontario) to meet in the summer at Newark (now Niagara). In that parliament he not only laid the groundwork of government but planned liberally for religious and educational work. The small "government house" has been modernized a bit by a cheap porch, but is still primitive as well as eloquent in historic interest.—Christian Science Monitor.

EUROPEAN SITUATION IS STILL UNCERTAIN

WARSAW, Aug. 16.—The Polish Peace Mission is said to be on its way back to Warsaw. Reports received here indicate that the delegation is passing through towns and villages occupied by Bolshevik forces. The local Jewish parish populations are said already to be setting up Soviet and Communist governments.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—With General Weygand, head of the French mission to Warsaw, commanding the Polish army and with the entire French General Staff directing General Wrangle's forces in Southern Russia, the theory of Marshal Foch that "might is right" officially is accepted here and the militarist party is practically in control of France.

In the meantime the reorganization of the 600,000 Polish troops is being conducted with feverish haste.

An immense aerial fleet is to be dispatched to Poland and will be followed by heavy artillery, clothing, rifles, etc., as well as officers to instruct in military tactics.

The plans Marshal Foch has made for General Wrangle's army could not be ascertained but they evidently are complete, for the Marshal is satisfied that his policy at last has been adopted.

The Foreign Office admits that France intends to fight the Moscow Government to a finish, being convinced absolutely that she has America's backing.

The undiluted approval of France's policy of war to the end against the Soviet is read in the note of the Washington State Department to the Italian Ambassador.

The reference in the note to the withdrawal of troops from occupied Russia is interpreted here to concern the Japanese contingent in Siberia, but not to affect in any way the troops of General Wrangle and of Poland, while the general tone is declared to be intensely sympathetic to the French viewpoint as opposed to the British pacifist attitude.

Therefore, sure of America's approval, France has embarked on a new war, the consequence of which, the most sanguine of military critics declare, is impossible to forecast.

Efforts are under way to enlist the support of Roumania and Hungary with a view to the initiation of a tremendous push, which Marshal Foch believes would sweep across Russia from the Black Sea to the Baltic and Finland to Siberia, eradicating Bolshevism from the entire country.

The diplomatic viewpoint of the situation to-day is that an extremely serious break in the French-British entente cordial coolly is contemplated by the Foreign Office, which states that French will not back down on her intended war plans.

Relations with Italy are strained, France charging Italy with the responsibility for Poland's fall, owing to the withdrawal of the Italian troops, which policed the Allenstein district at the very moment when armed resistance was necessary to prevent the Red army from cutting the Danzig-Warsaw communications.

Italy has indicated a strict neutrality in any armed conflict with Russia. She is sympathetic with the Russian people and her commercial relations with them are now in full swing. $50,000,000 worth of merchandise and raw material having already been exchanged via Trieste.

From the financial viewpoint the situation is viewed with extreme pessimism.

"France," said a prominent economist here today, "is spending good money, of which she has none too much, running after bad debts, the payment of which is doubtful. The Kolehak and Denikine adventures cost France more than 2,000,000,000 francs. Poland, General Wrangle, Roumania and Hungary will cost her more than she can ever collect from Germany."

In the meantime it is considered to be doubtful whether the Russo-Polish peace negotiation ever will take place owing to the encouragement given to the Warsaw Government by the French note dispatched yesterday, advising the negotiators to refuse the terms if they involve a reduction of the Polish governments.

UNCOVER OLD GRAVEYARD

(Mt. Sterling Advocate)
 Wednesday while digging a trench in order to lay a sewer pipe from the Mt. Sterling garage, a skeleton was struck and the bones of the legs and some ribs were removed. Stones indicating head and foot of a grave were removed and about eighteen inches below these stones were discovered the skeleton. It is possible that at some time a family graveyard was located at this point. We have not heard of any one of our older citizenship that could remember a graveyard at this point. The only item that could be called up was that some years past, in this same location, and near this point while laborers were engaged in similar work the head and face bones of a skeleton were unearthed.

ALVERSON OUT OF POLITICS

The Lexington Leader says: "Jesse M. Alverson, of Paris, former Clerk of the Kentucky State Senate, was in Lexington on business. Asked what he thought of the political situation in Kentucky, Mr. Alverson said he is out of politics. He bought a big farm in Bourbon county after he sold the Georgetown Times, of which he was editor and owner, to the Lancaster brothers."
