(mar21-tf) SAYS BLUEGRASS NOT A NATIVE PRODUCT

Contrary to popular belief, Kentucky blue grass is not a native of the United States, but was brought over from the Old World by early colonists, according to the Department of Agriculture, at Washington. The most important hay grass cultivated in the United States is said to be timothy. It grows throughout the northern half of the United States and as far south as the cotton belt.

TEACHERS URGED TO ATTEND BOSTON CONVENTION

Letters to city and county school superintendents and principals throughout the State have been sent out by J. Virgil Chapman, State supervisor of rural schools, urging them to attend the sixteenth annual session of the National Educational Association in Boston, July 2 to 8. "This will be in every sense an invigorating and inspiring convention," Mr. Chapman asserts. "A trip to Boston and its historic surroundings especially at the fourth of July period, with patriotic exercises in Faneuil Hall and on the famous Boston Common, is almost an education in itself. Kentucky teachers need such inspiration. More of them should be members of this great national body of educators, receive the literature and enjoy the benefits of such membership. All who can possibly do so should attend this, by far the greatest meeting in its history."
