PERILS OF THE AIR.

THE DARING WALK. DONALDSON'S LAST VOYAGE—HIS TRAITS OF CHARACTER—SOME INCIDENTS OF LOCAL INTEREST.

[From the Pittsburgh Telegraph, Oct. 4.] Apropos of the loss of the "Pathfinder," and the unfortunate occupants, the fate of Donaldson and Grimwood comes to mind.

Prof. Wash. A. Donaldson was well and favorably known hereabouts, and his handsome compact frame and fine features marked him as a particularly attractive man.

Donaldson made one hundred and thirty-nine successful ascensions, and had many hazardous escapes. He was originally a tightrope performer.

On May 3, 1862, he walked across the Schuylkill river, at Philadelphia, on a rope 1,200 feet long and 100 feet high, ending by jumping from the rope into the river, at a height of 90 feet.

On September 20, 1864, he walked a rope at Genesee Falls, Rochester, N. Y., that was 1,300 feet long and 200 feet high.

His balloon ascensions were marked by the most daring trapeze performances. He swung from a bar by one foot at a height of 5,000 feet, skinned the cat, and turned somersaults, 300 apple trees, peach and plum trees and a well on the premises.

His sixth ascension was at Norfolk, Virginia, on January 18, 1872. The balloon burst when four hundred feet high, but did not collapse.

It closed in at the sides, and the rush of air turned it into a parachute. It fell in a burr chestnut tree. Donaldson lost his grasp, and was precipitated through the limbs of the tree.

His tight-rope work, and his legs, arms and body were badly lacerated. The tree saved his life.

Donaldson's next trip was from Norfolk. He struck a wind that carried him seaward ten miles in seven minutes. Once on the ocean death was certain. He pulled the valve rope, but the gas escaped too slow.

He climbed the rigging, the balloon careening on its side, and silt the canvas. He struck the ground in a large cornfield, and was dragged nearly 1,000 feet. The wind blew a gale.

Crashing against a rail fence, he was rendered insensible. A tree on the ocean beach caught his balloon and ripped it to shreds, but saved his life.

On his ninety-eighth ascension Mr. Donaldson took up a wedding party. It was the first wedding in midair. The following is a copy of the marriage certificate:

CHARLES M. COLTON, Married, Miss MARY E. WALSH, in Ballroom "P. T. Barum," One South Second Street, Philadelphia, October 15, 1874.

REV. H. B. JEFFRIES, Officiating Clergyman.

Jeffries was a Swedenborgian, an odd chap who acted as reporter for the Leader, this city, but subsequently went out West to keep a hotel.

During Barum's exhibitions here in 1874 Mr. Donaldson made many ascensions, including one with a basketload of schoolmarm, including Miss Mulhatten, recently elected to a position at the High School. A number of newspaper men took trips with the bold aviator, who won all to him by his manly, cool and gentlemanly bearing.

Donaldson's last ascension was his one hundred and thirty-ninth, and was made at Chicago, July 15, 1875. The balloon was the P. T. Barum. She carried 83,000 cubic feet of gas and 800 pounds of sand. Mr. Grimwood of the Journal and Maitland of the Post were to go with Mr. Donaldson. Maitland was at one time employed upon a Pittsburgh paper.

Mr. E. F. Wood, a brother reporter, approached Mr. Grimwood a few moments before he entered the basket. "I only care to go once, just for the experience," said Mr. Grimwood.

"The wind's unfavorable, but perhaps an upper current will make that all right," Mr. Wood remarked.

Grimwood laughed. "It won't work," he said, with a shake of the head. "They're trying to frighten the reporters by saying that Donaldson expects to be carried into Michigan, with the chances of being gone two or three days. It won't work."

"Well," replied Mr. Wood, "what's the difference? If you should fly over to Michigan the trip would be all the more interesting, and you'd have a chance to spread in the Journal."

"That's so," said Grimwood. "Come to think of it, I'd like to land in Michigan. But if I'm going so far from home I ought to have more money."

He borrowed a ten dollar bill from a Mr. Adams, another reporter, saying: "I guess that'll do."

Mr. Wood then gave Grimwood a field glass to aid his observations while in mid-air. The basket was thrown into the air. Grimwood said: "If I should see that we're settling into the lake, I'll pull up my boots and slap on the life preserver. I'm a good swimmer, and can stand a good deal."

The two reporters stepped into the basket. Donaldson followed. The balloon was overburdened, and he said that only one reporter could accompany him. He called for a volunteer. "I'm behind. Neither reporter moved. Maitland pulled a copper from his pocket and flipped it in the air, and Grimwood shouted "head!"

Maitland went, and Grimwood was reluctantly crawling from the car when Mr. Donaldson's agent interfered. "Gentlemen," said he, "the basket is not to be lowered. It is to be lowered by your direction." He wrote "first choice" and "second choice" on slips of paper, and stuck them in a police officer's hat. The hat was held aloft. It was Grimwood's death warrant. He stepped back into the basket with Donaldson, and Maitland despondently withdrew.

The doomed balloon sped out of sight. A terrific storm swept over the lake (Michigan) and the balloon was seen no more. On the 16th of August the body of Grimwood was found on the east shore of Lake Michigan, near Stone Creek. The body was fully identified. It was completely clothed, except that the hat and boots were missing and around
