LOVE'S INTUITION
 By MARY WOOD
 Copyright, 1902, by the S. S. McClure Company

Above the shrill whirr of the crickets rose the hum of feminine voices. Under the green apple boughs the ham-mock conversation was in all swing. Miss Maybrick called it a horrid noise and preferred the doubtful coolness of the piazza. But, then, she was a college professor, too superior to appreciate the joys of the younger set.
 Jane Carew, however, sometimes agreed with her. This afternoon she hid her face behind a book, but her girlish fancies carried her far above the swaying leaves up into the perfect blue of the July sky. How lovely nature was this summer, how full life of new delights!

Miss Maybrick's name brought her back to earth again, Miss Maybrick, the one cloud in her sky.
 "Oh, yes, she approves of him," nancy Madge was saying. "She can put up with his sunburned face, roughened hands and the general boorishness of a farmer. But I suppose at her age any man is acceptable. To tell the truth, I have almost reached that condition myself in this man forsaken spot."
 And she shook her head in despair.

"Jane agrees with her," some one added a little maliciously. "She never seems to mind sharing his attentions with her."
 A book went down with a crash and angry spots of scarlet gloved in Jane's cheeks as she said defiantly: "John Stanton is not a boor; he is a gentleman. Just because he seems to talk the twaddle that men usually think good enough for his girls you vituperate him. He often makes me ashamed of the little I know, and the books he lends me have opened up a new world, a bigger world and better than all the flitting and shams and heartaches that go to make up society. No wonder he likes to talk to Miss Maybrick. She's worth the whole lot of us when it comes to knowing the things that are worth while!"

The girl stopped short with a gasp as she realized the horrified hush which had fallen on the circle. "Oh, what have I said?" she cried and brushed her face in her confusion.
 But Madge's gay voice was tender as she stroked the brown head. "You've read us a lecture, Jane, dear," she said gently, "but I fancy we needed it. You've been horrid to talk about one of your friends the way we talk about Stanton, and we ought to ask your pardon. As for Miss Maybrick, she's a stuck up old thing, and you're ever so much nicer than she is in spite of all she knows. Just wait till Cousin Alex comes next week, and see the new world that he opens to you. He is really literary and writes things for other people to read."

Jane's face was still hidden. She was battling to overcome her tears and even harder to drive out the heart the unreasonable jealousy of the older woman that somehow had crept into it. The time had been when she would have scorned to talk about one of her friends the way she talked about Stanton, and she ought to ask your pardon. As for Miss Maybrick, she's a stuck up old thing, and you're ever so much nicer than she is in spite of all she knows. Just wait till Cousin Alex comes next week, and see the new world that he opens to you. He is really literary and writes things for other people to read."

portunity to prove to Miss Jane that Stanton was but a boor of a farmer, after all, and no match for a man of the world like himself.
 If the older man detected his half veiled tone of patronage, he only smiled quizzically. Indeed his position soon grew more untenable than that of his adversary. As the conversation ranged from books to men and back to the purpose to which he had a thrill of pride, that Stanton more than held his own. What is more, he held his temper, a precaution neglected by the older man.
 At last the talk fell upon one of the recent novels, a book of unusual strength and breadth of view. Jane had read it with a thrill for she had been to point her to the new life she longed to live. Stanton was silent, as though in unspoken condemnation. Thereupon Hamblin became an enthusiastic reader and openly scoffed at his lack of appreciation.
 A shadow crossed the moonlit porch, but the three did not see Miss Maybrick till her voice broke in on the conversation.
 "You would not expect Mr. Stanton to criticize his own book, would you?"
 "How did you guess that?" Hamblin caught Jane's low exclamation of wonder, she added in a tone of surprise: "Had you not guessed that he was an author, Miss Carew?"
 "I have," said Jane, "I have seen your name in the paper and I have read your book. It is a good word for me too. For that I want to thank you."
 Stanton's face was turned toward the blushing girl, and in full moonlight Miss Maybrick could read his secret.
 If it sounded the deathknell to some hope of her own heart, she would not let her champion lead her lead the bewildered Alex for a walk down the lane and a gradual restoration of his self-confidence.
 "And I have to thank you, too, Jane," Stanton said tenderly.
 But he took her down to the orchard and told her in his own way.

Lectured by Carlyle.
 There are some amusing memories at Kye, in "Kye," of a visit once made there by Carlyle traveling in the train of the Astor. The Kye-bankers felt a lively curiosity concerning the distinguished author, and whenever he appeared in public he was surrounded by a crowd of inquiring men, women and children who had heard sensational reports concerning his "cleverness as a school." Carlyle seemed to like this kind of attention, and he was very cheerful round him while he was in the midst of his sea bath one day. Then he assailed them in language much more ornate and elegant, which soon made them take to their heels and scamper off with all speed out of his sight. Lady Ashburton had prayed with her daughter and servants morning and evening for some time, and never present. During these periods Nell Maclean, the landlady, used to relate, "he would lead me to the coffee room, and he would be lying hold of me by the coat buttonhole, he would lecture me for half an hour on end on all sorts of subjects, and he would not let me get away until he had put in a word, fancy," said Nell, "that I should be lectured to in such a way by Tommy Carlyle!"

A Live Oak Too.
 The bride was fair and slight and the bridegroom was dark and stalwart. They made a most interesting pair, and the people on the long distance train who had watched them more or less curiously, were all attracted and cheered by the sight of a shower of rice which fell out of the bride's parasol two days later.
 The bridegroom saw the smiles, and putting his arm round his blushing wife, he faced the careful of friendly strangers.
 "I reckon there's no need for me to say we haven't been married long," he announced in full chest tones, "but I can tell you one thing. You don't want to smile any more than 's polite, for you'll be laughing at me when we get to the oak, and I weigh 204 pounds."
EVARTS' QUIANT HUMOR.
 How He Passed a Foot and a Stepman into the Senate.
 During the last days of Oliver Wendell Holmes' life he visited Washington in company with Robert C. Winthrop, and both the venerable men visited the senate chamber on the occasion of some ceremonies which crowded the galleries with people, so that they were unable to stand. Frank, our own cards to Mr. Everts, hoping that he might arrange a place for them, and when he met them in the marble room he explained the matter, and the two men took to their heels and scampered off with all speed out of his sight. Lady Ashburton had prayed with her daughter and servants morning and evening for some time, and never present. During these periods Nell Maclean, the landlady, used to relate, "he would lead me to the coffee room, and he would be lying hold of me by the coat buttonhole, he would lecture me for half an hour on end on all sorts of subjects, and he would not let me get away until he had put in a word, fancy," said Nell, "that I should be lectured to in such a way by Tommy Carlyle!"

Great Men and Their Opinions.
 Dr. Johnson in all his greatness deplored the world of fashion and opinion, living the life of a slave. Our own Dr. Franklin was like the Englishman in some respects, and he appeared to be fond of imitating him in others, for he persisted in wearing a shabby old cap even among the savants and crowned heads of the old world when he was the United States minister at Paris. The comment is on the cabinet. Every schoolboy has heard how Nero defied public opinion, living in riot and revelry when the souls of his countrymen were in the hands of burning Moscow, saying, "This is comfortable." Half a million soldiers were at the same time dying of the plague, and he in the midst of it.
 It was the conflict of opinion which gave birth to the maxim that "where ignorance is bliss 't is folly to be wise." It was the conflict of opinion which frequently depend upon the mental standpoint of the individual sitting in the judgment seat.

A Quiet Examination.
 Silence, it appears, is an unknown quantity at a divinity examination in Harvard. The commencement is signalled by the clashing of cymbals and the beating of drums. While the candidates are writing their answers they are surrounded by a laboring crowd, who pass audibly remarks about what is being done. The test lasts ten days, and the people make the examination the occasion for gaining merit by the sale of the candidates' answers.
