NO TRACE OF BRODEUR.

Alleged Murderer Still at Large—Dead Woman's Sister Makes Statement.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Sept. 26.—The police reported yesterday that little progress had been made in the search for Alfred Brodeur, the alleged slayer of Matilda Case, who was murdered at her home, 53 Wilcox street, late Saturday night. The police worked hard yesterday to determine whether he was still in this city, but from all the clues obtainable they were unable to determine definitely whether he was being harbored here. The general impression still prevails that Brodeur has not left the county, but is being concealed by friends until interest in the case lags, when he will be able to make his escape with less chances for detection.

Hilma C. Segerstrom, one of the sisters of the murdered woman, said yesterday that some of the stories regarding her sister's past life were utterly untrue. She asserted that she knew nothing about her sister's relations with Brodeur. She had never seen or heard of Brodeur until she read of his connection with the murder. In discussing the case she stated that conditions had not been right in the Case household for a number of years and that frequent quarrels had taken place between the murdered woman and her husband. Whether or not these reported quarrels influenced her sister to seek another lover she did not know, but she thought that it might have had something to do with her sister's actions. The sister was formerly married to David O'Neil and secured a divorce from him during the early part of the month. O'Neil had lived with Mr. and Mrs. Case and had known Brodeur intimately. He was held as a material witness in the case immediately after the murder, but was released Sunday.

JUDGE LEWIS HIBBARD.

Former Vermonter Dead at Des Moines, Iowa.

Friends in Vermont and Massachusetts will regret to learn of the death, several months ago, of Judge Lewis B. Hibbard, curator of the Des Moines college library. Before going to Iowa, about four years ago, he had been for a score of years municipal judge of Highland Park, Ill. Back of that he was a Baptist minister, one time located at Adams in Berkshire, and always retained a lively interest in the affairs of that denomination. But it was as an independent newspaper editor and writer that he was best known. He made his mark in Vermont as Editor of the Ludlow Tribune, and had been in charge of the Farmers' Review of Chicago and other publications. Mr. Hibbard was active and efficient in the management of the exposition at New Orleans in 1884, and two years later was manager of the Minneapolis exposition. He was greatly interested in farm development in the United States. Mr. Hibbard thus had a wide experience and greatly profited by it, so that the colleagues in Des Moines must have found their librarian helpful along many lines, one who knew life and saw it sanely.

Charles Miner shipped his giant horse, Duke, to the Brockton fair this afternoon for exhibition. He will go from there to the Danbury, Conn., fair. Over 3000 persons were admitted to the tent on the local fair grounds during the three days of the Valley fair.

John Burton of White River Junction, who was seriously injured Tuesday near Putney when the automobile he was driving overturned and who has since been in the Memorial hospital, is reported to be not as well today. He appeared to hold his own until late yesterday afternoon, when his condition became worse.

Fritz Hanson of Laconia, who is one of the cleverest wrestlers in the game, can get a little action if he is willing to meet Jim Poulis of this city, says the Manchester Union. Poulis has been in training for several weeks and is ready for a hard campaign, and Hanson is his first choice. Both are clever and clean mat artists and would put up a fast bout.
