A Creed of Work For Women. I believe that every woman needs a skilled occupation, developed to the degree of possible self-support.

She needs it commercially, for an insurance against reverses. She needs it socially, for a comprehending sympathy with the world's workers.

She needs it intellectually, for a constructive habit of mind which makes knowledge effective. She needs it ethically, for a courageous willingness to do her share of the world's work.

I believe that every young woman should practice this skilled occupation, up to the time of her marriage, for gainful ends, with deliberate intent to acquire therefrom the widest possible professional and financial experience.

I believe that this general policy of economic service for American women would yield generously by products of intelligence, responsibility and contentment. —Laura Drake Gill.

MAKING LIST OF FARMS. State Publicity Bureau to Help Fill Demand for Vermont Summer Homes.

Several thousand inquiries have been received at the secretary of state's office during the past few months regarding various phases of the summer tourist business in Vermont, and the number of tourists visiting this state in 1916 apparently having been larger than in any preceding year, the time seems opportune to devote more attention to the advantages Vermont offers as an ideal location for summer homes.

The three principal attractions which the state offers in this respect are: Beauty and variety of scenery. Nearness to large centers of population. Moderate prices for suitable sites.

In order to reach a large number of persons who may desire to purchase sites for summer homes, the state publicity bureau proposes to publish for free distribution a list of small farms and cottage sites for sale, and any person owning such property in Vermont and desiring to sell it may secure the insertion of an advertisement without charge in the proposed book, by sending a description of the property to Guy W. Barker, secretary of State, Essex Junction, Vt. Where the site includes sufficient land for a flower or vegetable garden, or has available for use a good spring of water, such fact should be stated together with nearness to roads and to farms where supplies may be purchased.

The most desirable sites usually are those on the shore of a lake or pond, or locations on the slope of a hill or mountain, affording an extensive outlook. Of the latter class Vermont contains an unlimited number, and most property of this kind at the present time brings to the owners very little revenue.

The publicity bureau believes that there exists an opportunity very largely to increase Vermont's wealth and prosperity through a judicious development of the summer home proposition. The idea appeals to many persons employed in business and the professions, and particularly to those employed in educational pursuits who have long vacations. If high prices are charged for sites not now valuable a good opportunity will be lost. If moderate prices are established waste places will increase, new markets will be opened and a generally desirable class of people will become attached to Vermont. Then people will become good customers and many of them will become good neighbors. Good morals and good business alike demand that would-be purchasers be treated in a spirit of friendliness and fair dealing.

Through the newspapers of the state, the department appeals to the people of Vermont for their co-operation in building up a new and promising industry, which has been a source of large profit to some of the neighboring commonwealths.

History of the National Banking System DEFECTS IN THE ACT OF 1865 In our last article we outlined the banking system inaugurated by the National Banking Act of 1865 and pointed out a few of the benefits which it brought to the country. These were many. But the system was far from perfect. And its defects came to light every now and then—first in 1873, then in 1893 and again in 1907—the three great crisis years. About once in twenty years there seems to come a time when the strength of the American financial and commercial fabric is tested, when men lose confidence in each other's solvency, when the weakest of the banks are weeded out and the less wisely planned business enterprises go to the wall. And these crises, as they are called show up the flaws in a country's banking system. The National Banking Act of 1865 gave the United States a sound and uniform currency. But it failed to provide for variation in the amount of this currency to correspond to the variations in the demand for it. Banks issued more or less of their notes according as the price of U. S. bonds made it more or less profitable. Now there are certain times of the year, notably in the fall, in crop moving time when the country needs more money, more of the medium by which products of the soil can be exchanged for manufactured goods and vice versa. At these times banks need ability to make loans and need ability to meet the increased demands made by depositors. And in crisis years they need this twice as much. Their resources may be double their liabilities, but they need some way to turn those resources into a medium of exchange which will circulate as money while the extraordinary demand lasts. When normal times return they don't need the money. It is a white elephant on their hands and a positive injury to the country. And for that reason a good banking system would provide an "elastic currency", that is to say, one which will increase or decrease rapidly, as occasion requires. This the National Banking System utterly failed to provide. And this was why Congress, after the crisis of 1907, appointed the Aldrich or National Monetary Commission, and in 1908 passed the Aldrich Vreeland Act. THE VERMONT NATIONAL BANK Banking Series No. 17.

Bank Advertising Advertising has come to be universal in modern life. Time was when it was thought undignified for a bank to advertise. The reason this bank advertises is because it wishes to encourage thrift and sound business methods in the community, and extend the usefulness of this bank as widely as possible.
