THE VERDICT IN THE WOOTTEN CASE YESTERDAY.

SHE DOESN'T MIND IT VERY MUCH.

Miss Nora Wootten, the erratic young female, who attempted the life of Dr. H. A. Sims, has been acquitted on the ground of insanity.

The case occupied the attention of the Hustings Court all day and the verdict of the jury was not rendered till nearly six o'clock. After much difficulty the following gentlemen were selected as jurors: A. M. Nelson, J. E. Lewis, Henry Bohn, Howard Chipman, James S. Simmons, George F. Dyer, W. C. Thomas, S. K. Law horn, Robert Hopperoff, James T. Hinton, Eugene Ford and John S. Campbell.

The prisoner was represented by Messrs. Phlegar, Berkeley and Johnson, and Thomas N. Williams, esq., assisted Roy Smith in the prosecution. The witnesses for the defense were Dr. Sims, Frank B. Caldwell, Rush U. Derr and Dr. W. S. Gregory. Their testimony related to the immediate incidents of the attempted killing, the particulars of which are already known to the readers of the TIMES.

Dr. Lewis G. Pedigo and H. W. Harrison were examined as medical experts and testified that they believed the woman to be suffering from a mental mania, which rendered her course naturally erratic and at times violent. One of the strong symptoms of this mania is to imagine some association between herself and some prominent person, and sometimes a professional man, but most frequently a preacher was selected as the subject of her special attentions, and associated with her hallucinations. In most cases this imagination was excited at aggravated stages of the disease. Dr. Pedigo testified at length of this disease and cited similar cases. He also stated that he had known the prisoner some years and had predicted such an outcome of her condition a considerable time ago.

Rev. J. W. Lynch stated that she had visited him several times and desired to take the veil. She also stated that she wanted to marry one of two men and asked his advice as to which one to choose. He clearly saw signs of insanity at that time.

The case was interesting throughout, and the court room was crowded all day, every eye straining their vision for a glimpse of the young woman. All the lawyers of the Roanoke bar were there at different times during the day.

Mr. Williams made a very short speech for the Commonwealth, and was followed by Captain W. W. Berkeley for the defense. Captain Berkeley started off calmly and deliberately, taking a sip of water about every five minutes he had been confined thoroughly aroused, and at times his voice could be heard a square away. It was only a few moments before his standing collar had wilted, and he unbuttoned his vest, mopped the perspiration from his forehead with a linen handkerchief, as his argument progressed. He poured hot shot into Smith & Williams, on the other side, but they allowed a smile to play on their countenances, stopping occasionally to take a snuff.

Miss Wootten smiled frequently while the speech of Mr. Williams was being delivered. When he said that if the jury believed from the evidence that she was guilty they would have to send her to the penitentiary for five years, Miss Wootten exclaimed passionately, "you'll have to hang me then when I get out again!" She interrupted him several times while speaking.

Miss Wootten looked as fresh and rosy as possible when she was brought into the court room. She has been well cared for by Sergeant Thomas, and showed no signs of her confinement. She is a small woman, with rosy cheeks, a wealth of brown hair and two large brown eyes that gazed restlessly around the room, and never seemed to fix themselves upon anyone object. She was attired in a black dress and a large black three-cornered felt hat. Her mother occupied a chair just in the rear of the prisoner's box, and was in a deep mourning attire.

The jury was only out of the room ten minutes when the above verdict was brought in.

The only thing Miss Wootten said when the result was brought in was, "I had hoped to be discharged, I don't want to go to that horrid old asylum."

She was remanded back to jail to be sent to the asylum as soon as practicable.

Against the Norfolk and Western.

In the Giles county circuit court yesterday the jury gave Dailey C. Lindamond's administrator a verdict for seven thousand five hundred dollars against the Norfolk and Western railroad for the killing of Dailey C. Lindamond at Pearisburg station, in February last by a collision between two freight train.

The law point decided in the case is that the conductor and engineer of one train of cars are not the fellow servants of another train of the same company, but that they are vice-principals of the company.

The point is a new one and has not yet been settled by our Court of Appeals, except by analogy in other cases.

The railroad company will apply for an appeal.

ABOUT THE HOTELS.

There was an ex-candidate for Congress in town yesterday, but he is so well known to the people of the town, he hardly needs an introduction. Major Griffin is the gentleman referred to, and he opposed Hopkins. He is in Roanoke at least half of his time, and his friends here are very numerous.

Major L. D. Lorentz, of Washington, is stopping at Marshall's Cafe and yesterday ate dinner in company with Judge McLane and a number of other gentlemen. The major wears a white moustache and a Prince Albert coat and thinks that his adopted home is destined to be the finest city in the world. He is interested in a new explosive and the factory may possibly be started here.

Major Hutter was in town yesterday and left in the early train this morning for his home in Lynchburg. The major is almost looked upon as a citizen of Roanoke. He has known the town from its infancy and laid it out. At this time the major is largely interested in a number of mining and real estate enterprises. It is such men as he that are making the name of Southwest Virginia synonymous with push, enterprise and vigor.

We had the pleasure today of meeting C. M. Reich, who is stopping at Marshall's Cafe. He is a gentleman of rare attainments—one who is well versed and well read in all the important topics of the day. He falls from Bridgeport, Conn., and is a well built gentleman of about fifty, with iron gray beard and hair. He dresses in black, carries his overcoat on his left arm, is fond of a cigar, wears a plain black tie; and, in all, makes a neat appearance. He is correspondent for several of the northern papers.

WEST END ADDITION.

Desirability of and Demands for Lots There.

All who come to this city, either as visitors or residents, are pleased with its location as well as with the energy and enterprise of its people.

As soon as they have ascended one of the gently rising elevations of the city and viewed the handsome public buildings, many of them fresh from the builders hands, and all of them comparatively new, they are filled with admiration for the city and its progressive people, and begin at once, if they are able, to make investments with the ultimate intention of building themselves homes.

In whatever direction they look they see eligible building lots and houses in different degrees of construction. In the western part of the city the view, however is one of the most enchanting and that location for residences is most numerous and desirable. The land from Grove street westward, with occasional undulations, rises gradually, till within a few hundred yards of Roanoke river, where it slopes westward to the beautiful valley border, the banks of that noble stream.

Just where the last western ascent commences, a handsome boulevard of a mile in length begins, and from this to the north, and south runs numerous streets, intersecting others leading east and west. These streets are well planned and the houses worked out into lots, the most desirable to be found anywhere for the purposes of residences.

The demand for these lots was such that the company soon disposed of all of them, and they are now owned mostly by single individuals. Messrs. James S. Simmons & Co., are agents for a large number of these owners, and their numerous daily sales of lots fully attest the great demand for them.

The Roanoke Street Railway Company have lately completed a line through the center of this property and cars run hourly from the Union depot by this route to the western limits of the city. Here, removed from the bustle and turmoil of the business centers, the business man can find the rest and quiet of a suburban home without any of its attendant advantages. The pure air from the surrounding mountains will pervade the blood which courses through his veins, and the panoramic view of the city and its environs, in its nature or tasteful in art will soothe his mind when wearied with the cares of constant daily toil.

The elevation is such that every lot is thoroughly drained without being abruptly steep or permeated with ledges of stone, so commonly the case in mountainous districts. Many of the streets have been planted in trees which in time will give a splendid shade and make the West End addition not only one of the choicest parts of the city in natural advantages, but one of the loveliest portions also.

The lover of nature can here gratify his tastes by adorning his ground or proportion to the area which he holds. Water, electric and gas lights, the telephone and the letter carrier system will be as completely within his reach as if he resided in the center of the city, and a few yards from his door, ready for his call will be street cars to carry him to his place of business during working days or to church upon the Sabbath.

All things considered, the West End property offers advantages to purchasers which cannot be surpassed, and that these advantages are appreciated there, those in process of construction, or contemplated, abundantly prove.

A talk with the leading contractors of the city will satisfy the most skeptical of the clerk of the corporation committee to the many fine building sites there are owned by men of means and culture, who have purchased solely to build themselves homes of taste and comfort at an early date.
