

THE KINKAJOU'S WAYS.

A Really Beautiful Creature as Charming as it is Good Natured.

May I introduce to your favorable notice my friend Mr. Kinkajou, of South America? Circumstances prevent his visiting you personally, but the accompanying picture will show you exactly how he looks.

Indeed, his absence is timely, for it enables me to tell you of many of his charming qualities, which would embarrass him if he were present.

To begin with, he is purely American. He never has been found on the eastern hemisphere, though certain distant relatives of his make their homes there.

In size the kinkajou resembles a large cat. From his picture you might fancy he belonged to the monkey tribe, but the bear family claim him. His long tail is very useful in climbing from tree to tree, for he can hang or swing by it as easily as any monkey. In captivity he coils it round and round till it looks like a thick mat, and he uses it as a blanket or mattress, whichever he chooses.

His tongue is remarkable in that it is very long. In his native haunts he lives on insects and sweet fruits; and when he finds wild honey he considers himself very lucky indeed. His liking for this dainty has given him another name—"honey-bear." In obtaining the honey stored in crevices of rock or hollow trees his long tongue is very useful—in fact, he could not do without it.

His head is round, and his ears are like those of a cat, and, like the cat, his habits are nocturnal. His fur is a tawny-yellow, a trifle darker on the back than underneath.

But, beautiful as he is to look at, he is good as he is beautiful. Though when caught and tamed he longs for his native land and his free, happy life in the forest, he is a pattern for the most particular. He is not mischievous;

THE KINKAJOU.

he is neat; he is good-tempered, and as loving and affectionate as a child.

One of these really beautiful creatures, owned by a lady, was one night seeking some sweet food of which he was extremely fond. He fancied that it was concealed in some vase on the parlor mantel. Instead of smashing all the bric-a-brac, as a monkey would have done, he took one vase at a time, examined it (with his tongue, I fear), and then set it carefully on the floor. Pictures, too, were examined, were actually taken from the walls, and placed gently on the floor beside the vases.

In the morning, when his owner entered the room, she found no more mischief done than an absolutely new arrangement of her choice ornaments and engravings.

Mr. Kinkajou has one rather bad habit which I will touch upon briefly. Sometimes, in the forests, he has been known to snatch mother birds out of their nests with those deft little claws of his, and drink the contents of their eggs; still, so long as this bad practice is confined to his home we will not censure him too severely, but think, with gratitude, of our own lack of faults both at home and abroad.

For fear of all your congregation will at once send orders for a kinkajou, I must tell you that his home is in Guiana, Venezuela, and the United States of Colombia. Like the monkey, he has always been accustomed to the warm, moist climate of the tropical forests, and he does not long survive a removal to a colder country.—St. Nicholas.

Order in the House.

The French parliament was not always famous for the excitements and turmoils of its debates. In the old monarchical days, before the revolution, the sessions of the old parliament were exceedingly dull and prosy affairs. One day, it is related, a noble count was trying to make a speech, and a very prosy speech it was, while all the other members were either chatting or resting.

Presently the president of the body rapped slightly with his baton. "If those gentlemen who are talking to each other," said he, "would kindly make no more noise than those gentlemen who are snoring, it would be much appreciated by those gentlemen who are trying to listen!"

Somewhat Particular.

A story which is told of the late Charles Jarrach, the naturalist and dealer in wild animals, who died in England last summer, is so well vouched for that it may be accepted as worthy of belief. Mr. Jarrach was married more than once, and the story is to the effect that when a friend consoled with him on the loss of his second wife with the naturalist answered, with a heavy sigh: "Yes, yes; as you say, she was a good wife. But," he added, as if he felt compelled to speak the whole truth, "she never took kindly to the animals. Why, even in winter, she wouldn't let the snakes sleep under the bed."

Fun in the Nursery.

"Pooh!" sneered the India-rubber doll to the jumping-jack. "You're no good." "That's all right," retorted the jumping-jack, pleasantly. "I'm always dancing and laughing, while you cry if anybody squeezes you."—Harper's Young People.
