Covers That Will Stand the Severest Treatment.

Although Made at Home They Are Just as Pretty as Those Sold in the Book Stores—Directions for Putting Them Together.

I shall not consider the dainty protecting covers of plush, silk, satin or chamois, with their decorations of ribbon, painting and embroidery, but the plain, serviceable covers for constant use, on the magazines which one wishes to lend generously, which are to be used in a reading club or, above all, which are likely to receive severe treatment at home.

It may happen that it develops upon one to assist in establishing a reading room "ten miles from a lemon," where cash is scarce and time and ingenuity plenty. In this case, writes Lucia M. Harvey in the Youth's Companion, it is a brilliant double stroke of economy and convenience to make these home-made covers.

Roll the curtains high, and cover the long dining table with newspapers, with plenty more near at hand upon which to paste. Have ready in a basket all the necessary materials, namely, scissors, pencil, rule and square, strong cord and an awl; a sharp knife, a punch and set, and a paper of eyelets from the shoemaker's shop; a roll of large, strong pieces of cotton cloth, another of odds and ends of small figured wall paper, a quantity of the heaviest, stiffest pasteboard obtainable, some book cloth, marbled paper from the nearest book bindery, broad brushes and glue.

The glue, put to melt in a glue pot on the range, will be dissolved by the time a bowl of common flour paste is ready.

Lay the brushes upon a large, clean plate in the center of the table.

Measure the magazines to be fitted, and cut from the pasteboard pieces a trifle larger than the magazines.

From the book cloth cut the oblong pieces for backs and corners, taking care that they are long enough to turn over on the wrong side sufficiently.

Fig. 1 shows the back and corner pieces on the cover, ready to turn over.

Lay six of these book cloth backs in a pile, with edges carefully evened, and with pencil and rule make dots at equal intervals, about an inch from the outer edges. With a punch make holes over these dots, and with the set of eyelets may be expeditiously inserted.

Next cut from the cotton cloth strips of the same shape as the backs, but a trifle shorter.

Now cut from the marbled paper pieces to fit the outsides of the pasteboards, allowing them to lap over on the wrong side about an inch, and clip off the front corners diagonally.

The inside linings of the wall paper are cut a little smaller than the pasteboard pieces. Now lay all the cut material in neat piles, ready to put together.

Coat the book cloth corners over with paste and glue. Then draw them tightly across the front corners of the pasteboard pieces, lapping on the wrong side.

The inside of a back is now coated strongly, and laid on clean papers. Even with, and close to the row of eyelet holes, lay the two pasteboard pieces, one on each side.

Saturate a cotton cloth piece with the paste and glue, and lay it parallel with the book cloth back, joining all together. Turn down the projecting edges evenly, and let all lie flat a minute, to set.

Cover the outside now with the marbled paper, and lastly the insides with the lining paper, to make all look neat on the inside. Let it dry over an old magazine, the size of the one it is to be used on, if possible, as the proper shape is then retained.

Natural Cold Storage Warehouses. Actual experiment may show that the suggestion of the Kentucky man who pronounced the Mammoth cave to be a "fine storage warehouse" is not so grotesque after all. A southern orange-grower has placed several boxes of oranges and lemons in a cave where the temperature was about 50 degrees and the air dry, and he has succeeded in keeping the former in excellent condition for sixteen months and the latter for a year. The temperature of the Mammoth cave is about 53 degrees the year round, while the air is so dry that the remnants of the old wooden rats seem imperishable. The success of this method of keeping oranges would prove a bonanza to orange-growers, as it would enable the Florida people to market their crop when there was the greatest natural demand for it.

Fighting the B. & O. in Chicago.

CHICAGO, March 15.—It was discovered yesterday morning that the Illinois Central Railroad Company during Sunday night had laid a switch track south of the World's Fair grounds, which, if it can be maintained, will effectually block the Baltimore and Ohio from reaching its proposed terminal on the grounds and thus shut out all other roads. The work, it is claimed, was done under a permit granted by the village of Hyde Park before it was annexed to the city.
