STOLEN SECURITIES. HOW THEY ARE DISPOSED OF IN LONDON WITH IMPUNITY.

The Negotiation of "Rogue" Bonds a Regular and "Legitimate" Business in Threadneedle Street—Dealers Have Agents in America and on the Continent.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—London enjoys the unenviable reputation of being the great, and indeed it may add the only, market in the world for the disposal of stolen bonds, share certificates and scrip of every description.

Few people save the police, the bank robbers and the members of the London Stock exchange are aware of these facts. But it seems to me that the matter should be made more widely known, in order that public pressure from every quarter of the civilized world may be brought to bear upon the British government with the object of inducing the latter to amend its laws in accordance with the dictates of commercial honor and probity.

It was last year that a British court of justice, presided over by the lord chief justice of England, affirmed once more the existence of this extraordinary law, according to which stolen bonds constitute a valid exchange and a negotiable instrument on the London stock market.

If the latter is genuine—that is, not a forgery—and if it is not nominal, but negotiable by transfer to bearer, the London Stock exchange does not consider itself to be at liberty to step into the place of the issuing government or concern and to alter its character.

The large harvest reaped by these London dealers in stolen bonds during the last decade, and the ease with which they have obtained the sums demanded for the restitution of the scrip, and the legal immunity which they have enjoyed, have contributed to enormously increase the number of bond robbers all over the civilized world.

These agents are stationed in almost every important city of the continent of Europe and of America. At Paris they mostly haunt the cafes in the neighborhood of the Elysee Montmartre.

Whenever any bond robbery takes place nowadays—and they have enormously increased in number and importance of late—the victims of the theft and the police commence by devoting all their energies toward preventing the stolen scrip from leaving the country and from reaching London.

The Largest House-furnishing Establishment IN THE SOUTH.

In selecting goods in any line it is always desirable to do so from large stocks, and where large stocks in every line can be combined under one management the cost of handling them is reduced, and both an advantage in prices and convenience secured to the purchaser.

This somewhat startling advice on the part of the police is almost invariably followed, and the police even go so far as to give the victim the names of several solicitors or lawyers in London who, if they have not the stolen property in their possession, at least know where it is and are acquainted with the character of the negotiations to be adopted for its restitution.

These terms are nearly always the same. They consist of half the face value of the stolen bonds. Thus when M. Burat, the well known Paris agent de change or stockbroker, was robbed some years ago of $150,000 worth of bonds, he was compelled to pay $75,000 to a London firm of lawyers in order to recover the possession of the scrip.

New Idea for Panels and Table Tops. A new idea for decorating the tops of tables or wood panels is to arrange fern leaves on the wood so as to form a design, and fasten them slightly here and there with gum just enough to prevent them from being shifted.

Any color may be chosen for this work, but brown is the prettiest. In order to obtain a richer brown burnt umber may be mixed with the sepia. Great care must be taken to obtain a fine spray, as any heavy drop of color would spoil the background, and it is best to try first on a piece of cardboard.

Charming effects may be obtained by giving the fern leaves different shades. This is done by removing some of the leaves before the background is completely darkened and letting them take a light tinge of brown from the spray. In this way one may produce two or three different degrees or shades. Ivy leaves are also very effective, in fact, everything in that line may serve, as well as conventional designs cut out in paper and fastened on the wood.—Decorator and Furnisher.
