INDIAN HUCKSTERS.

PICTURESQUE SCENES IN A NEW MEXICAN TOWN.

Pueblo Women Peddle Fruit and Pottery—The Ancient Village of Isleta and Its Queer People—Industrious Red Men. How They Live.

POTTERY MAKERS.

The village of Isleta is immediately on the line of the railroad, but they rarely utilize the road, preferring to walk rather than pay fare.

The women do the marketing, and in addition to two or three baskets of fruit a few pieces of pottery are also brought along.

The Indian maidens are dressed in their brightest colors, and some of them would be pretty if they did not dash their faces with chunks of red paint.

The Indian braves bring in bales of chile and rushes on burros, or what are called "narrow gauge mules."

and Aztecs—the earliest tribes of which we have any knowledge. The history of the pueblos is rich in legend, war and romance.

Isleta contains about 1,000 inhabitants. They are industrious and except on feast and fete days a uniformly sober people.

They pursue agriculture—cultivating mainly corn, beans, pumpkins and fruits. They have their little patches of one, two and three acres, which are irrigated by ditches which tap the "raging" Rio Grande.

How to feed the multitudes that will pass through the gates of Jackson park next year was a problem that for many months gave the directors and officials of the fair no little care and uneasiness.

INDIAN APRICOT VENDERS.

At several commanding positions in the village an Indian is seen on the flat roof, and a sentinel is invariably seen upon the roof of the church—the highest building in the village.

In addition to agriculture, they make the clothes they wear, which is not a great task—weaving the cloth and dressing the skins for their shoes, leggings and pantaloons.

ment," entrance to which is made by means of a ladder through a trap door in the roof. This was the custom centuries ago.

The plan of construction of these houses has never been changed. The houses are built in common, and in compartments, as French flats, but instead of pushing the hutton the caller stands outside and gives warwhoops until he arouses the host.

The city government is conducted independently of any other of the pueblo villages. Each village has its own separate government—a free republic in itself.

Long before Columbus sailed from Palos in search of a new world this Indian village—Isleta—was ancient. In this valley—now called the Rio Grande—the pueblos had their villages and enjoyed a "semi-barbarous civilization" in the pursuit of agriculture.

The history of the pueblo of Isleta is involved in that obscurity which surrounds an unlettered people, but their local "historians" hand down the traditions of their race from generation to generation and century to century, dating back from the migrations to this country of the Toltecs and Aztecs—the earliest tribes of which we have any knowledge. The history of the pueblos is rich in legend, war and romance, and its most interesting pages will never be written.

FEEDING THE MULTITUDE.

Restaurant Accommodations Provided at the World's Fair Grounds.

CHICAGO, Oct. 10.—Visitors to the World's fair will not go hungry, provided only that they have money. There will be plenty to eat, and plenty of restaurants wherein to eat it.

There will be a Casino restaurant for people who don't mind paying out a ten dollar bill for a little lunch; a fishery restaurant where nothing but a spoil of the net and the hook and line will be purveyed; and a clam bake restaurant, around which visitors from New England coast resorts may lounge and grow fat.

Whether the exposition management should run the restaurants themselves or give concessions to experienced caterers; whether they should be located in the buildings or in separate structures, what fuel should be used, how the supplies should be handled, how the service should be regulated, what charges should be made—these and a thousand other questions bothered the members of the committee by day and kept them awake at night.

Finally they called to their aid the Delmonico of the west, who has seen forty years of service in providing for the wants of the inner man. For nearly two weeks, day after day, he tramped over the broad World's fair acres. Then he embodied his conclusions, recommendations and suggestions in an elaborate report, and turned it in to headquarters. It has not been made public, nor will it be, but it solves the problem and has taken a great load off the minds of the management.

These figures are exclusive of the 50,000 employees, most of whom will eat within the inclosure, and who will eat three square meals a day. He believes that the average cost of a meal ought not to exceed fifty cents, a figure which certainly ought to be satisfactory to everybody, and which ought to make it unnecessary for our country consuls to load themselves up with a hamper of ham sandwiches and homemade cake before starting southward for a day's sightseeing.
