A VERDICT FOR ENGLEDOVE.

His Famous Suit Against Fishburne and Others Decided.

His Damages Assessed by the Jury at $4,000.—He Sued for $10,000 for Not Being Allowed to Use a Room Rented in the Exchange Building as a Saloon. Motion Made to Set the Verdict Aside. Other Sessions of the Circuit Court.

The celebrated and hard fought case of A. D. Englelove vs. T. T. Fishburne and others forming the Exchange Building Company, which has been on trial in the circuit court for the past five days has reached an end, and last night at 10 o'clock the jury reached a verdict in favor of the plaintiff and assessed his damages at $4,000.

This was a suit for $10,000, damages claimed by Englelove, who had rented a room in the Exchange building, which he used for a saloon and was not permitted to use it by the Exchange Building Company, according to the terms of the lease. The suit was tried in the circuit court on two previous occasions, each trial resulting in a hung jury and on each occasion there were eleven jurors in favor of returning a verdict for the defendants.

The plaintiff's counsel were Griffin & Glasgow and the defendants were represented by Penn & Cooke, Smith & King, Scott & Staples, C. B. Moomaw and Thomas W. Miller.

After the jury had announced the verdict Robert E. Scott, on behalf of J. W. Coon, moved that the verdict be set aside as it was not in accordance with the law and facts, especially so far as Mr. Coon was concerned. The opposing counsel declined to argue the motion and the court announced the decision would be given this morning.

A special session was called, to convene the first Monday in November, for the hearing of chancery causes alone. The regular winter term will meet the second Monday in November, giving one additional week for chancery litigation. The fall term will close today, as Judge Dupuy will begin court at Bedford on Monday.

THE COURTS AND GRAND JURY.

Captain Bird of the Militia Company, Testified Yesterday.

In the Hastings Court yesterday Thos. G. Penn was tried for renting houses for illegal purposes in two cases. In one case the jury imposed a fine of $50, in the other $25.

A. B. Cook was tried in two cases for selling and renting property without first obtaining license.

The grand jury is making considerable progress in investigating the riot, and examined about twenty-five witnesses yesterday. Among those who gave their testimony before the jury was Capt. John Bird, of the Roanoke Light Infantry.

It is still the opinion of the jurors that the investigation will occupy the greater part of next week.

POPULIST CONFERENCE TO-DAY.

Meet to Consider the Advisability of Naming a Candidate for Senator.

As was first given to the public through the columns of THE TIMES last Tuesday morning, there will be a conference of Third party leaders in this city to-day at 12 o'clock to decide on the advisability of nominating a candidate for Senator to make the race against J. Allen Watts.

The Populists of Craig have decided to send the following delegates, who may be expected here to-day when the local Third parties will tender them the freedom of the city:

Delegates—William Charlton, George W. Snodgrass, Joel G. Sower, William L. Farrier, William Layman, P. A. Webb, John Woods and Bennett Huffman.

Alternates—George N. Nooney, John Linton, David Craft, Robert H. Caldwell, George Francisco, P. W. Eakin, Taylor Huffman and F. H. Huffman.

Nothing yet has been heard from Montgomery county, and it is not known whether any delegates will be on hand or not. The lone delegate who attended the legislative convention at Salem may be here. Among the candidates mentioned are William C. Flagg, of Montgomery; Robert B. Wilson, of Salem; George W. Snodgrass and William L. Farrier, of Craig.

A Deer in Our Midst.

A small deer made its appearance within the city limits at an early hour last evening, passing near the gate to the fence surrounding the residence of J. P. McGee, who lives on Seventeenth street east. The deer, which seemed to be nothing but a doe, came out of Carr's woods and passed east toward the Crozer furnaces. Several hounds were in pursuit of the animal and appeared on its trail about three-quarters of an hour after the deer was seen. The deer was probably being hunted down by some hunter and his dogs, and the little fellow driven out of the woods to within settled limits.

Effie Ellsler in "Doria."

To many it will be a novelty to see Effie Ellsler in some other play than "Hazel Kirk," and other equally familiar roles. But yielding more to a desire of her own for the old play still possesses great charms for playgoers. She has brought forward a new creation of her genius, "Doria," which has already gained the title of "Hazel Kirk's" great successor. "Doria," was written for Miss Ellsler by Robert Drouet, and the author has evolved a play of unusual dramatic interest and admirably adapted to Miss Ellsler's talents. It is a drama of the domestic order, the scene being laid in an English village. It has an excellent plot, numerous fine and telling situations. There is considerable agreeable comedy in the piece, and little of the somberness usually found in emotional dramas. The cast, as is customary with Miss Ellsler's companies, is a good one, including Frank Weston, Robert Drouet, Harry Eytlinge and others.

Powell, the Magician.

The clever and, to the ordinary eye, inexplicable feats performed by his wonderful man, make him incomparable, save with the magicians of old. Of the same feats performed there are none more mystifying or fascinating than the wonderful illusion, "Fearian; or, From the Earth to the Sun," presented for the first time in America by Powell. Two pretty ladies are in this illusion, one a brunette, the other a blonde, both of different size and each dressed differently. One is placed in a large cannon, situated at the extreme front of the stage, the other stands at the extreme upper corner of the stage in a scenic star placed some ten or twelve feet in the air from the floor of the stage. At a given signal, and without any apparent preparation, the cannon is fired, and in a second, and before the report has fairly died away, the two ladies have changed places, the one that was placed in the cannon appearing in the star, and the one that was in midair, reappearing immediately from the cannon. How this is done is Powell's own secret, but this great sensational novelty is in itself alone worth the price of admission to see. Powell's appearance here at the Academy of Music is Saturday evening, October 21st. Don't miss seeing him.

Pawnee Bill's Wild West.

Pawnee Bill's wild west show gave two very entertaining exhibitions on the show grounds on West Salem avenue at 2 o'clock and 8 o'clock p. m. and a fine street parade at 11 o'clock. The ring enclosed by canvas included an area of about 2 acres, and the attendance, especially at the afternoon performance, was very large, including many people from the surrounding country. Lasso throwing was seen to great advantage in the chase after wild steers. The capture and punishment of a horse thief by Judge Lynch excited interest as he was trailed across the open field and speedily hung, although the sight was perhaps no novelty to all the audience. The horseback riding was exceptionally good as was also the rifle shooting by Pawnee Bill and Miss May Lillie. The Comanche and Pawnee Indians, the Mexican greasers and cowboys were real and presented an attractive sight.

The Solree a Pleasant Affair.

The first solree of the season was given by Professor Bellezza last night at the armory and was a pronounced success in many particulars. Besides his class a large number of other ladies and gentlemen were in attendance. The following are among those present: Misses Carr, Sexton, Penn, Mamie Preston, Sallie Preston, Snidow, Huger, Crane, Withers, Coe, Bransford, Mrs. Matson and Mrs. Matman. Messrs. Starkey, Penn, Spindle, Turner, Bower, Martson, Hunt, Vaughan, Hancock, Payne, Gordon, Bransford and Coe. The chaperones were Mrs. T. H. Bransford, Mrs. Frank Huger and Mrs. Porter.

Police Court Fines.

Judge Turner had several cases before him yesterday morning, but none of much importance. Elias Dean was fined $2.50 for being drunk. Dan Brooks, and J. K. Turpin, for the same offense, $5 each. Henry Smith and Bertha Danridge were each fined $5 for being engaged in a fight; and London Beall and James Johnson were fined $2 a piece for trespassing.

Local Brevities.

Hayes Evans, advance agent for Bob Hunting's circus, was in the city yesterday, arranging for the appearance of that show here October 25.

Riley Shilling was married yesterday to Miss Cora Creasey, at the residence of the bride's mother, in the Melrose addition, by Rev. J. H. Blackwell.

A small fire in a negro cottage on Ninth avenue east, about 9:30 o'clock last night, caused the Friendship Fire Company to turn out in response to an alarm from box 23. The fire, which originated in a bed, was put out before the department arrived.

Almond & Benson, a firm of enterprising young men from Knoxville, Tenn., have rented the vacant storehouse at the corner of Commonwealth avenue and Third avenue northeast for the purpose of conducting a candy manufactory. They will begin work Monday.

"MIKE" AT PAWNEE BILL'S SHOW.

He Passed One of the Most Enjoyable Days of His Life.

Yesterday was a gala day for "Mike," the large and handsome mascot of THE TIMES office. The appearance of Pawnee Bill's show was the occasion of all his fun and excitement, and to say that he enjoyed it doesn't half express the facts in the case. Next to a fire, "Mike's" delight is in the participation in a procession of any kind, and he was out early to lead the cowboy and Indian riders who appeared on the streets in the morning.

But it was not until after the wild west show had commenced upon its afternoon performance that "Mike" was in his element. He appeared within the ring and for a time contented himself with a survey of the painted warriors and brightly attired cowboys of the company from a good point of observation on the stand near the band. When the riders appeared he was all activity and he joined in the races with an appreciable relish. But it was not until the firing began that Mike evinced his greatest pleasure. Then he entered into the sport with a determination to be in the middle of the conflict.

In among the heels of the prancing bronchos where the firing was thickest here Mike was to be seen. He didn't snap at the legs of the animals and bark and growl at the riders; Mike is too well behaved a dog to do any such thing. He left that part of the business to a little cur which he could almost have swallowed at one gulp. But the report of the rifles and pistols were music in his ears and he was the best entertained by it all when a brawny buck would bend over and discharge a blank cartridge at his very head.

Mike returned from the show early after its close and felt aggrieved that he was not allowed to indulge in the sport again last night. In the opinion of many Mike's antics were some of the most interesting features of the entertainment.

Judge Staples May Speak Here.

Judge W. R. Staples is expected in Roanoke to-day. He is en route to Salem, where he will be engaged during the next week in the case of the Berryville Land Company vs. Strouse. An effort has been made to get Judge Staples to speak in Roanoke during the coming week, and he has consented to do so if the conduct of his case will permit.

ON SLEEP.

The Rev. Whangdoodle Baxter Talks on the Subject.

FELLER SINNERS—One ob do greatest enemies ob sleep am de tender pashun. I means lub, ob course. Ef yer puts two men in de same bedroom, one ob 'em sufferin' from tooofache and de udder sufferin' from too much tender pashun, you will diskliver dat de one wid de tooofache goes ter sleep fust. [Heah! heah! heah!]

Some folks regard sleep as sacred. Dat's de reason dat a jedgo in western Texas has put de Baptist church under bonds ter refrain from shoutin, yellin and jumpin up an down in dar religious wurshup. He allowed dat sleep was requisite ter heah, and ter rob a man ob his sleep was just as much an infringement ob his right as fer rob his hen-roost.

An I tells you all dat hevas right. Dar's no sense in a man yellin in church as ef dar was a centipede saunterin up under his shirt. And do same applies ter de woman folks too. At de same time dis heah belubbed pasture don't berlieve in goin to de extreme. I don't wanter see my congregashun goin ter sleep while Ize exponndin de gospel. I don't wanter yer noddin assent at ebery propoishun what I makes, not for a cent.

Sleep am good for man and beast, but hit am possorable ter oberdo it. Dar's a woman up norf what sleeps free weeks at a time. Hit don't do in dis heah practical life heah on yarf ter dream away too much time, or you won't git no-whares. You should remember dat der turckle wun de race while Brer Rabbit was a dreamin.

Sleep knits up de raveled sleeve ob keer, but she lets de wornout seat of poverty's pants take keer ob hitself, which puts me in mind dat yore pasture am sufferin for close. Does yer take de hint?—Texas Siftings.

Good Use of a Flag.

In Havana there was one evening a great row in the streets, and a man was killed. Every one ran away except an Englishman, who did not see why he should run off, but stopped to do what he could for the wounded man. The city was then, as it often was, under martial law, and in a few minutes a party of soldiers came up and walked the Englishman off. He was tried then and there by a sort of drumhead court martial and condemned to be shot the next morning at 8 o'clock.

He managed to get the news conveyed to the English consul, and at 7:45 o'clock next morning the consul appeared in his coach and four, uniform, cocked hat and sword, all his orders on, etc. The shooting party were drawn out, and the prisoner was there too. The consul walked up to the officer commanding the party and demanded the life of his countryman.

"Very sorry," said the officer, "but I must carry out my orders," and he showed the warrant signed by the governor. "Well," said the consul, "at least you'll allow me to shake hands with him before he dies." "I can't refuse that," was the reply. On which the consul stepped up to the Englishman, put his hand into his breast coat pocket, drew out a union jack, unfolded it, threw it over the man and then said, "There, now, fire if you dare!" The lieutenant was staggered, the matter was referred to the governor, and the Englishman was saved.—London Spectator.

MILLS AS A FIGHTER.

HIS VIGOROUS SPEECH IN THE REPEAL BILL DEBATE.

How the Texas Senator Runs Counter to Public Opinion—The President's Opportunity—The Passage Where He Raised His Voice to a Commanding Height.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 6.—[Special.]—Senator Mills of Texas made one of the most vigorous speeches of the repeal bill debate. He was forceful not only in his rhetoric and his gestures, but he had the backwoodsman habit of pulling his sleeves up above his elbows. Mr. Mills is a plain, blunt man, who believes in calling a spade a spade, and like many another man of this sort reared in the woods or in the fields, likes to take his coat off whenever he has important business on hand. If it had been possible for Mr. Mills to take off his coat without violating the propriety of the senate chamber, doubtless he would have done so and been glad of the chance. But since this was impossible he did the next best thing, and between his sentences tugged away at his coat sleeves and kept them most of the time well rolled up above his elbows. When you see a man with his coat off or with his sleeves pushed up, you may be sure he means business. Mr. Mills meant business on this occasion. He threw mauls, sledge hammers, rocks and other things at the heads of the opposition.

A Courageous Texan.

This repeal bill debate has brought out some queer situations, and Mr. Mills' position is an illustration of the manner in which this contest has induced men to stand now for things which they never stood for before. Mr. Mills has always been a silver man. He represents one of the strongest silver states in the Union, but these things make no difference with a man like Mills. On reaching the conclusion that his duty in this particular instance was to favor repeal, he would have done so had the whole state of Texas marched up here with shotguns and pistols in hand to prevent him. As chairman of the house committee on ways and means Mr. Mills favored free wool, although his state of Texas and particularly the district which he then represented were solid for the wool tariff. He fought prohibition in Texas when prohibition seemed likely to capture the state.

When he was a candidate for senator, Governor Hogg wrote him a letter offering to patch up a political matter, but the blunt and bluff Mr. Mills declined the hand of peace extended by this influential Texan, and on the eve of the senatorial battle sent a letter in reply that must have made Mr. Hogg's hair stand on end in anger and surprise. Notwithstanding all these acts of running counter to public opinion in his district and state, Mr. Mills has always been returned to congress and was finally promoted to the senate by his admiring constituents. The theory on which Mr. Mills governs his life is that the people of Texas respect a man of courage and consistency and will not strike him down.

In the Senatorial Theater.

During the long weeks of discussion we have had some rather pathetic scenes in the senate chamber, and none more sad, though with a conical side to them, than the heartlessness with which some senators are deserted by their colleagues whenever they rise to commence their speeches. In what is known as the morning hour, which comes immediately after the senate meets, the attendance is usually very large. Nearly every senator is in his seat, for if the day is to bring forth any new move on the part of the leaders it is expected to show itself at this time. As soon as preliminaries are settled in the morning hour and the senator who is entitled to the floor arises in his place and addresses the presiding officer, as a rule about 50 senators also rise in their places and make for the cloakrooms, the restaurant or the committee rooms.

A similar exodus occurs from the press gallery, where the correspondents are all ways on the alert for politics or battle, but have no patience for listening to long and prosaic speeches. The occupants of the public galleries, however, do not stir. They are there out of curiosity, to see the great men and hear them, and to most of these auditors the speech of one great man is nearly as good as a speech of another. Thus almost in a twinkling the orator finds himself with an exceedingly top heavy house. On the floor are the presiding officer, the clerks, a few pages and perhaps five or six senators scattered about and looking very lonesome. The audience is in the galleries. Strictly speaking, the auditors to whom the senator addresses his words are not in the capitol at all, but far away in the state which he represents. They are the people whom the speaker wishes to reach, and whose favor he seeks.

When the Scene Changes.

If one wishes to see how quickly the senate may change in this theater of politics and ambition, let him wait for that moment in which a dull and uninteresting senator takes his seat and some of the real orators or leaders rise to address the senate. People come flocking into the chamber through the doors like bees entering a hive after swarming. They come from the cloakrooms, committee rooms, and even from the faraway library and house, so quickly that one wonders how they could have received the information that there had been a change of scene and of speakers in the senate chamber. In 60 seconds the senate changes from sleepiness, lonesomeness and desertion to a theater crowded with animated and eager senators and newspaper correspondents.

The President Addresses Congress.

President Cleveland improved an opportunity the other day to make a little speech to the senate and house. In the early days of the republic it was the regular practice for the president to come to the capitol at the beginning of each session of congress and make an address to the national legislature, this address taking the place of the annual message of later days. The occasion which the president improved was the anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of the capitol. The president presided at this meeting and made a short speech. It was noticeable that when the voice of the speaker had failed to reach more than a very small number of the large audience present, the strong, vigorous tones of Mr. Cleveland rang out clear and distinct over the whole assemblage. He did not look or act at all like a man whose health had been undermined by some constitutional trouble. One passage of his address had evidently been prepared for the ears of those senators who might be present, and when he reached this passage the president turned his face toward that part of the platform on which the senators were sitting and raised his voice to a commanding height. It is not often during the consideration of a great public question in congress that the president obtains an opportunity personally to address members of the senate and house assembled together.
