AN AMERICAN IN THE ORIENT.

Miss Alice Roosevelt's tour in Asia has been notable for many reasons. It is the first of the sort which has been made by any American girl. It has covered more thousands of miles of travel than women usually undertake even when they have several times as long to do it in as she will have. Everywhere she has been accorded the honors commonly extended to members of royal families of great nations, although she herself is the most democratic of women.

The reception extended to the President's daughter by the emperor and empress of Japan was notable for the marks of consideration shown here.

Her treatment by the Empress Tsi An, of China, who until this time had been an enemy of all foreigners, was marked by a cordiality and a distinction which broke all traditions. The oldest inhabitant recalls no such reception by the emperor of Korea as that which he extended to this typical daughter of a typical citizen of the United States. London, Paris, Berlin and St. Petersburg papers have commented on the series of honors which have been extended to this modest American woman.

These honors to the daughter of America's President are given to her as the representative of a country which is exerting a large and steadily increasing influence in the world's affairs. A few years hence President Roosevelt will leave office and be merged into the mass of the citizenship, but his country will keep on growing in power and prestige. Its distinction as a leader in the world's progress has been emphasized by several events even in the year of this memorable visit to the Orient. No other nation has ever gained the pre-eminence in the world's affairs since the Rome of the Caesars as the United States possesses at this moment.

It is in this aspect that the distinctions heaped upon the daughter of the President assume their principal significance.

Domestic war may be quite as bad for Russia as the foreign article, but the czar has the satisfaction of knowing that there will be no attempt made to bluff him out of a big indemnity.

The present pope is too wise to issue a bull against the earthquakes in Italy as one of his predecessors once did against a comet, which shows how science can march hand in hand with faith in higher things.

Judge Alton B. Parker's comments on the campaign of 190 are interesting if for no other reason than that they seem to disclose an honest belief on his part that at one time he considered himself to be an actual factor in the contest.

All things considered, a sea level canal is admitted to be the best. It will cost a little more, but there is nothing in the line of waterways that is too good for Uncle Sam.

National Chairman Taggart says that his committee received no help from the insurance companies in 1904. Probably the committee was unable to pass the necessary physical examination.

A Fearful Fate

It is a fearful fate to have to endure the terrible torture of Piles. "I can truthfully say," writes Harry Colson, of Masonville, Ia., "that for Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Protruding Piles Bucklen's Arnica Salve, is the best cure made." SHE BUDDIED ON THE FOURTH

(Original.)

How pleased I was to receive Mrs. Clifford's invitation to spend the Fourth of July at the Clifford country place. "We shall be very quiet," she wrote. "You mustn't expect any gaiety. There will be no one here except the members of our family. Sorry I can't have a young lady for you, but I don't want the trouble of one."

The Clifford children were Grace and Charlie. When I had last seen them, Grace was a sweet little girl seven or eight years of age--an ethereal child whom an artist would choose for spirituelle model purposes. Charlie was three years younger. What luck for me, this opportunity to turn my back on the crackling, booming city and spend the day with this quiet family.

When I arrived--in time for dinner on the evening of the 3d--I was reminded how time flies. Grace Clifford, though she still wore her dresses quite short, was as tall as she was likely to be. Charlie was nearly fifteen. Grace seemed to have retained her childish gentleness, and Charlie also seemed a quiet, retiring boy, devoted, so his mother told me, to books. We dined undisturbed by the sound of a single cracker, the children so well behaved that neither of them spoke during the meal. Indeed I, being a young man considerably under thirty, remembering that Grace must be eighteen, felt inclined to have some words with her, especially as she was very pretty. But she maintained her reserve in presence of the father and mother at table and after dinner. I saw her no more during the evening.

The next morning I was awakened by the spiteful snap of a firecracker. I turned over and slept again. I was awakened by a second snap, this time to stay awake. I felt under my pillow for my watch and noted the time--5 o'clock. I had been told that breakfast would be at 9. Four hours' interval, and I felt hungry. I must get another nap. I shut my eyelids and resolved that I would sleep despite the daylight streaming in at my window. I was dozing off when there came another crack--not a good round noise, but a spiteful, malicious, malignant little snap, not big enough to fully awaken me, but to disturb the slumber into which I was drifting. I continued to keep my eyes closed tightly, hoping to fall asleep, but there came a succession of cracks in monotonous regularity and volume. I covered my ears with the sheet and persevered. My efforts were of no avail. The contemptible snaps continued, and at last I gave up, opened my eyes and looked at the window.

I saw a little brass cannon resting on the rail of the balcony on to which my room opened. A hand projecting from a coat sleeve, with a lighted match, was thrust forward to touch off the cannon, but the flame was blown out by the wind before it reached the vent. I waited and watched. Another match was tried and failed. Then a bit of lighted firecracker was tried, and this time the wrist of the hand that held it wore a bracelet. "I also heard a girl's giggle. The cannon was fired."

It was still but half past 5 o'clock. Should I endure this annoyance or make an attempt to stop it? I got up and, looking into the hall, saw the door of a bedroom opposite standing open. I went in, closed the door, threw myself on the bed and succeeded in getting a few minutes' slumber before being called. Meanwhile I presume the children kept on with their firing, supposing they were annoying me. At breakfast Grace looked demure enough for a nun. I made no reference to my discovery.

The children kept their crackers exploding all the morning. If I went on to the front piazza they came with them there. If I went to the back piazza they also changed for my new position. We dined at 1 o'clock, and after dinner I sought the library for a nap. I expected to hear more crackers, but I did not. I was dozing off when an immense bee came tumbling on to my nose. I made a frantic grasp for it and failed. I settled myself again, and again came the bee. This time I saw that it was a bit of paper hanging by a thread to a stick. I shut my eyes and pretended to sleep. The bee climbed all over my nose, but I paid no attention to it. Finally I snored. Out of the corner of my eye I saw Grace Clifford steal softly from behind a screen with a plant sprayer in her hand. Reaching forward, she gave me its contents. Almost before the water reached me I sprang up, seized her in my arms and covered her face with kisses.

"Let me go or I'll call papa!" she cried, struggling vigorously. "Call as loud as you like." "You're not a gentleman." "Nor are you a lady." "How dare you say that to me?" "No lady would fire a brass cannon under a guest's window to keep him awake."

She gave a spasmodic giggle. "Or sting his nose with a bumblebee."

Another giggle. "Now, I've taken the kisses to pay for keeping me awake for three hours this morning, and I'm going to take pay for the bumblebee."

I gave her half a dozen smacks. "Now we'll settle for the spray." I gave her a round dozen more and opened my arms. She flew out of the room like a bird.

"Poor Grace!" said Mrs. Clifford when her daughter did not appear for the fireworks prepared for the "children" in the evening. "She's gone to bed with a headache. She's such a delicate child."

Before the next Fourth the sensitive child was my betrothed.

TYPOON STRIKES MANILLA CAUSING GREAT DISTRESS

Terrible Wind Storm Sweeps the Island Killing 5 and Injuring 200 and Destroys Dwellings Leaving 8,000 Filipinos Homeless.

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.--The Evening Sun has a dispatch from Manilla reporting that a destructive typhoon in that city. Then active districts were swept away, 8,000 persons are homeless, five Filipinos were killed and 200 were injured. Hundreds of buildings were unroofed.

Thousands of electric light wires were blown down, filling the streets with flames until the current was turned off. The city was in darkness when this dispatch was sent and all the street traffic was suspended.

It is believed that shipping in the bay had been warned of the approach of the storm, but up to the time of the dispatch the ships were invisible on account of the rain, and had not communicated with the shore.
