LIFE IS WORTH WHILE.

Mrs. Hetty Green by her own confession is 70 years of age. She is a living, aggressive protest against Geriatricism. Russell Sage, now 89 years of age, is another. Both are shining examples of cheerful old age. Both are striking illustrations of the truth of the old saying that life is worth living. Both testify to the fact that those who have rounded out successful careers find enjoyment in achievement even when their eye are turned toward the setting sun.

Senator Thomas C. Platt, one of the most successful political leaders of the last decade, takes a different view. He has admitted to himself a doubt as to whether all that he has done in his sixty eight years of life was worth while.

John D. Rockefeller, who is younger by two years than Mr. Platt and who has had some trouble of his own, takes a more cheerful view. Looking back on his life, he is free to say that it has been worth living. What he has done seems to him worth while. He is our richest man, as Mrs. Hetty Green is our richest woman, and both seem to be having a great deal of fun in her declining years.

Speaker Cannon is three years older than Mr. Rockefeller and is leading as active a career in politics and constitution legislation as any congressman twenty years younger. With his eyes turned toward the setting sun, he cheerfully admits that he is having the time of his life. Certainly he believes that life is worth living and that what he has done since he passed the sixty year mile stone is worth while.

We have here in Chicago men like Judge Tuley--78, Judge Hurd--77, Ossian Guthrie--80, Dr. Samuel Willard--84, fair representatives of western men who take honest pride in the fact that they have lived to good purpose and who overturn all the tenets of Geriatricism.

In the case of Judge Tuley, his associates go even further than himself in the belief that all that he has done has been worth while. Dr. Willard and Judge Hurd began their careers when the underground railroad was an institution in Illinois and their eyes brighten over the recollections of the strenuous old times as contrasted with their serene enjoyment of the strenuous new times.

Ossian Guthrie, who made the first borings for the drainage canal, is still on the firing line, not very far behind Congressman Lorimer in enthusiasm for deep water way to the gulf. He believes that every minute of his life was worth living, and he keeps as watchful an eye on the whimsies and freakish undercurrents and upheavals of Lake Michigan as he did thirty years ago.

In fact, Mrs. Hetty Green, Russell Sage, Judge Tuley and Dr. Willard, to say nothing of hundreds like them, show that life is worth while, every hour and every minute.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

In addition to writing romantic stories Jack London occasionally lives a few melodramatic chapters himself.

Jimmie Hyde hopes the country notices the kind of men he has been obliged to associate with since early youth.

A report from Seoul says the Korean emperor has agreed to Japan's terms. Evidently there are some humorists in Seoul.

Having conquered the cigarette and Sunday drinking habits, Indiana may yet be able to curb its passion for novel writing.
