After all, why should politicians get free railway rides any more than free groceries and free clothes.

Japans government is not as big and secure as it thought it was if it can not stand freedom of the universities.

Maybe Mr. McCall is withholding that resignation as a Christmas present with which to delight the policyholders.

We may look for almost any kind of outbreak from Castro now. His name was not even mentioned in the president's message.

District Attorney Jerome can't think of several impressive arguments with which to persuade Mr. Ryan that he ought to answer the questions.

Presumably the theory on which some of the senators voted to withhold honors from Mitchell is that he committed the unpardonable offense of being found out.

It does not seem to occur to some insurance magnates that "mutilization" might give the policyholders a right to say something about the government supervision question.

The land fraud operators have ceased to assail Secretary Hitchcock by sneaking schemes and hunted cover.
They found the ability as well as the character of the secretary too much for them.

SIR HENRY MORGAN, BUCCANEER

By CYRUS TOWNSEND BRADY,
Author of "The Southerners," "For Love of Country," "The Grip of Honor," Etc.

COPYRIGHT, 1905, BY G. W. DILLINGHAM COMPANY

Synopsis of Preceding Chapter

Sir Henry Morgan, former pirate, having purchased immunity and knighthood from the king of England, has reformed and has become vice governor of Jamaica. He is deposed and, killing the officers sent to arrest him, determines to become again a freebooter. Benjamin Hornigold, ex-pirate, who has been bitterly wronged by Morgan, joins the fortunes of the latter in order to seek an opportunity to wreak vengeance on him. Having recruited a crew of ex-pirates and other desperadoes, Morgan seizes an English frigate and murders her crew. Off for the Spanish coast in search of treasure. In a desperate action, wherein are shown the daring and resourcefulness of Morgan and the courage of his men, he defeats two Spanish frigates and captures their convoy, a treasure galleon carrying an abbot and priests as passengers.

"What think ye, gentlemen?" asked Morgan, at last pointing to the point looming fearfully close ahead of them. "Can we weather it?"

"Never!" answered De Lussan, shaking his head. "Well, it has been a short cruise and a merry one. Pity to lose our freightage and lives."

"And you, Velsers?"

"No," said the German, "it can't be done. Why did we ever come to this cursed coast?"

"Avast there!" cried Morgan, thinking quickly. "Gentlemen, we'll club-haul the ship."

"The water's too deep, my captain, to give holding ground to the anchor," urged Raveneau, shrugging his shoulders.

"It shoals yonder, I think," answered Morgan. "We'll hold on until the last minute and then try."

"'Tis wasted labor," growled Velsers.

"And certain death to hold on," added the Frenchman.

"Have you anything else to propose, sirs?" asked Morgan sharply. "We can't tack ship against this wind and sea. There's no room to wear. What's to do?"

The men made no answer.

"Forward there!" cried the old buccaneer. And it was astonishing the force and power with which he made himself heard in spite of the roar of the wind and the smash of the sea. "Get the lee anchor off the bows there! L'Ollonnois?"

"Aye, aye!"

"Run a hawser from the anchor in aft here on the quarter. We'll club-haul the ship. See the cable clear for running."

"Very good, sir!" cried the Frenchman, summoning the hardest hands and the most skillful to carry out his commander's orders.

"Ready it is, sir," answered Hornigold, tightening his grasp on the spokes and nodding his head to his superior.

"To the braces, lads! Obey orders sharply! It's our last chance."

The water was roaring and smashing against the shore not a cable's length away. Usually in those latitudes it deepened tremendously a short distance from the low water mark, and there was a grave question whether or not the anchor, with the scope they could give it, would reach bottom. At any rate, it must be tried, and tried now. Morgan had held on as long as he dared. Another minute and they would strike.

"Down helm!" he shouted. "Flow the head sheets! Round in on the fore braces there! Show that canvas aft!"

The lateen sail on the crossjack yard had been furled, and Morgan, to force her head around, directed the after guard to spring into the mizzen rigging with a bit of tarpaulin and by exposing it and their bodies to the wind to act as a sail in assisting her to head away from the shore.

"Helm a-lee! Hard a-lee!" cried Hornigold, who, with his men, was grasping the spokes like a giant.

Slowly the old galleon swung up into the wind, the waves beating upon her bows with a noise like crashes of thunder. A moment she hung. She could go no farther.

"She's in iron! Swing that yard!" roared Morgan. "Cut and veer away forward!"

There was a splash as the anchor dropped overboard.

"Hands on that hawser!" he shouted. "Everybody walk away with it!"

The whole crew apparently piled on to the anchor hawser in the hope of

The men came rushing aft, baring their weapons

pulling the ship's stern around so that the wind would take her on the other bow. She was still hanging in the wind and driving straight on shore.

"Haul away!" cried Morgan, but the hawser came in board through their hands with a readiness and ease that showed the anchor had not taken the ground. The drag of the cable to the anchor, however, and the still unspent impetus of the first swing turned the galleon's stern slightly to windward. Her head began slowly to fall off.

"She stays! She makes it!" cried the captain. "Meet her with the helm! Let go and haul! Cut away the hawser!"

It had been a tremendous feat of seamanship and bade fair to be successful. It was yet touch and go, however, and the breakers were perilously near. They were writhing around her fore-foot now, yet the wind was at last coming in over the other bow.
