WIFE BEATER A VICTIM OF VIOLENT MOB

PLAINVIEW, NEB., Dec. 29.—Because he did not leave town as ordered by the court, Henry Haack, of Cole Ridge, convicted of beating his wife, was the victim of mob violence.

With his nose broken, all the clothes torn from his person, a jaw fractured, hair torn from the scalp, both eyes swollen shut, his body bruised, his lungs full of water, he was left to die by a lonely road. Hours later a sympathetic farmer found him, unconscious and ready to expire. He brought the unfortunate to town and sought medical aid. It is thought Haack cannot live. He had gone through an awful ordeal. The angry crowd caught him, placed him astride a small rail, and carried him about the street. He was thrown into several water tanks and nearly drowned. For four miles he was driven like a beast, was kicked and pounded by fists and clubs. When they were sure he had been tortured sufficiently so that he would never be able to beat his wife again, the tormentors abandoned their prey.
