BIG CORN CROP IS NECESSARY

James A. Patten Gives Out Interview Before Leaving for Europe.

James A. Patten, the Chicago cotton operator, who retired definitely from the business world on July 1, was a passenger on the liner Kroonland, says a New York special to the Chicago Tribune. Before leaving, Mr. Patten gave a lengthy talk in which he said that, in his opinion, the continuance of good conditions in this country depended largely on the corn crop, that Wall street was "provincial," and that speculation had been the leading cause of business success since the world began and would continue to be so.

"A good corn crop is essential to the general welfare of the country," said Mr. Patten. "You see the cotton crop is short, the wheat crop is short, and the short corn crop means dull times here. If the western farmers who have been speculating in lands lose their corn crop they will be in a pickle."

"I do not say the corn crop will fail, but the rains have been light in the corn belt, and we are entering a drouth period. We must have rain now to help the corn. In Iowa, which may be taken as a fair example, the rainfall has been only one-half normal for the last four months."

High Corn Means High Wheat.

"Naturally, the high prices for meats that the people are talking about will be held up or sent higher by the scarcity of corn. Probably 80 per cent of the corn grown in the west never crosses the county lines, but is fed to the hogs and cattle. If corn is scarce and high, naturally the price of beef and pork will follow it."

Patten said he thought the underlying principle was sound. The three-cornered fight of the democrats, insurgents and standpaters, he believes, has been responsible for business unrest and for depression in the stock prices.

RED SPIDER NOT SERIOUS PEST

Commissioner Takes Exception to Statement Regarding Scourge.

That there is no occasion for alarm on the invasion of the red spider in the orchards of the Yak'ma valley as told by Deputy Inspector Starcher in an interview published in this paper Friday, is the opinion of F. A. Huntley, state commissioner of horticulture.

"The pest is no worse this year than it was the year before or the year before that," said Mr. Huntley this afternoon. "I don't consider that there is any occasion for alarm in regard to this red spider. It is an annual pest that can be sprayed for every year with sulphur and lime and where this is done the spiders will be reduced to a very small per cent of their original number."

"The present infection is found mostly along roadsides where it is dusty and the atmosphere is particularly hot and dry. The interior of the orchards are not nearly as susceptible to infection—especially where the ground is well irrigated and cultivated—it will be found that the red spider is not very abundant."

Easily Kept Under Control.

"Then it is quite an easy matter to keep the pest under control. An occasional spraying with clear water will put the pest in check. However, I have found that the best remedy where the spiders are numerous is the use of salt water in the proportion of six pounds of salt to 40 gallons of water. This should be used in a fine, misty spray under high pressure."

"The impression that the spider is worse this year than any previous years is entirely erroneous. As I have said before it is an annual pest that can be easily kept well in check."

Peloquin Thanks Neighbors.

P. F. Peloquin thinks his house near Malaga, which burned to the ground yesterday, caught in his bath room and that his wife must have stepped on a match just before leaving the house to join him in the orchard which is about a half mile from the house. She departed at 1:10 and neighbors discovered the fire at 1:30. They came running and might have been able to do something toward saving the property, but the water connections were inside the house and it was locked. So they could do nothing more than throw buckets of water on the fire. But everything was so dry that the building burned like tinder.

The value of the building and furniture was about $1800 and was insured for $600. Mr. Peloquin will rebuild at once. He is congratulating himself that his family of children were all absent and that no harm came to them. Neighbors have been very kind and have offered the use of their homes until a new house is built.

FRED SIMPICH OF BAGDAD

San Francisco Bulletin Has Breezy Story of Former Daily World Man.

Everybody knows where Bagdad is, because Haround el Raschid Caliph founded the city along about 700 A. D., so the fellow who wrote the Arabian Nights could use it for his local color, says the San Francisco Bulletin. Bagdad was a success as local color, and the Arabian Nights is still a best seller in spite of blonde heroines and Harrison Fisher pictures in the modern novels. Bagdad, as we all know, is in Turkey in Asia, that big pink chunk of map in the geography. It is up near the Euphrates river, in the part of the world sometimes known as Mesopotamia, close to the ruins of Babylon and the Garden of Eden that was.

It is a long way from San Francisco to Bagdad, and even tourist agents have to mull around a lot of route books to tell you how to get there, but Fred Simpich, formerly of San Francisco and the Bulletin, made the trip in about three months and is American consul now at Bagdad. He writes to his friends occasionally and uses a lot of funny looking stamps, colored and designed like Turkish rugs. His mail gets to him by way of Constantinople by a camel caravan that spends thirty days on the desert. Mrs. Simpich, who went there on her honeymoon, is the only American woman in Bagdad, and there are only three other white women in the place, so society is exclusive enough to almost suit a Blingumite.

It gets awfully hot in Bagdad, the thermometer keeping well above the hundred mark for about four months in the summer, according to Consul Simpich, who has been there more than a year now. He says he misses the Market street breeze. They are building railroads and irrigation works around Bagdad and Consul Simpich keeps the State Department advised regarding trade conditions in that far off part of the world.

The "Don't Need To" Theory

In a recent debate at Reno Mr. James Jeffries failed to convince Mr. John Johnson.

Some seven or eight years ago Mr. Jeffries was the leading man in his line of work. Business was good and his profits were big.

Having all the money he could handle at the time, he concluded to take a rest.

To be sure, he planned to get into the field again at the proper time.

But everything was rosy and there really seemed no good and sufficient reason why he should spend so many hours a day keeping his muscles lithe and strong and his wind good and his heart and nerves in trim.

Eventually the meeting with Mr. Johnson was arranged. Mr. Jeffries was still tolerably content with what he had done. (Brother, a has-done is about as bad as a has-been.)

Mr. Jeffries did not care to stand up in the training ring and punch and take punches. He did not see any necessity of practicing side-steps and feints and rushes.

He knew all about them. Why, seven years ago he had done all of that he ever needed to do.

Mr. Johnson did not overlook the boxing and the wrestling and the clinching and the sidestepping, etc.

As a result, Mr. Jeffries received Mr. Johnson's compliments on the point of the jaw and his business career closed.

Advertising a business is the training of that business. Advertising keeps a business healthy.

It tones up its liver, strengthens its biceps, steadies its heart and keeps its nerves in order.

Once in a while a man decides that he is doing so much business that he can stop advertising for a while and run on momentum.

Momentum is the gradual process toward a full stop.

The momentum business is usually prematurely full-stopped by the straight left jab of the well-trained competitor who finds his opening in the fifteenth round.

If you want to stay in business stay in the advertising field.

No matter how much business you are doing, keep up the energy that makes it.

You might as well cut off your legs because you are running well in a foot race as to cut off your advertising because your business is too good.

You might as well tell the insurance man that you are so healthy you will drop the policy for a few years as to stop advertising because the orders are piling up.

"Don't need to" is the eventual preliminary to "Can't do it."

The only man who doesn't need to advertise is the man who has retired from business.

The only policy holder who doesn't need to pay his premiums is dead.

Mr. Jeffries doesn't need to train any more. He is licked.
