A SYLLABUS OF THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

(From the New York Sun.)

At the close of a month divided almos qually between central and middle Western States, which are in a sense typical, there are a few general observations the may be worth recording as July and August notes upon the national political situation. In a general way it has been pointed out in this correspondence that there is no tremendous or universal up rising for Mr. Heyan either east or wes if the Mississippi river, that, to accept the gambler's phrase, there is every out ward indication that the campaign is "to go as it lies." and lies republican. States visited are far lrighter than they were at the same stage of the campaign in 1896 seems to be a fair and conservative statement uation is the fact that there are every where to be found conditions which promise to keep the compaign alive, to worry the campaign managers and to puzzle the observers up to election day, Underneath this lies the really significent conclusion that seems to flow from any examination of July and August conditions, namely, that so strerly subordinsted and obscured are the national issues that it is hardly possible to realize that there is a national division, a partisan conflict going on. In the middle West there runs a riot of morals which are economic; in the center States there is another riot of morals, which are liquid. and these absorb the local interest and the local attention.

To be told in Wisconsin that the course of the La Follette faction will settle the electoral vote of the State; to be informed in Indiana that the national polities of that State may follow the issue the conflict between run and the white ribben, is to be thrown back upon a set of conditions which must be thoroughly perplexing. In the middle West the republicans are divided between the "progressive" and the "reactionary," In the central States they are divided between the "wet" and "dey," If the beat of the conflict drives either faction to the democrats to bulk the democratic chances of nterest and excitement to the observer as well as infinite worry to the republican campaign manager. Mr. Bryan's whole campaign is manifeatly to be directed at the republican radicals in the middle West. Democrats in Indiana and Ohio are building their whole battle line in such fashion as to catch the liquor element in the local Republican party. In August the outward evidence all points toward democratic failure in each instance, but such eviience will obviously need further confirmation and corroboration in October to be permanently satisfactory. There is, further, one feature commo to all the States visited. Everywhere is to be noted a very marked movement democrats who have been outside of the party lines since 1896, back to their old partisan alignment, a movement marked enough to make the issue doubtful in a lose State such as Indiana. In Missouri, moreover, where thousands of Bryan democrats followed Roosevelt in 1994, this return is especially significant. In addition, one of the best informed Kentucky republicans declared that a similar reinegration was taking place in Kentucky. He also expressed the opinion, which is at least worth mentioning, that this movement would rob the republicans of much of their real hope of carrying border States.

erats a result of the movement in the main is the upgrowth of a feeling among diana and Ohio and in Kansas may be uate of the Randolph normal school and Howard Dunwiddle, a disciple of the Hely University of Vermont, married August Rollers, a strange religious sect, attacked main feature of the situation is the demonstrated for the situation is the situation in the situation in the situation is the situation in the situation in the situation is the situation in the situation in the situation is the situation in the situation in the situation is the situation in the situation in the situation in the situation is the situation in the situation in the situation in the situation is the situation in the situation is the situation in the situation main feature of the situation is the democratic hope locally, the feeling that after years of hopelessness there is the return of a chance, a fighting chance Of course republican factional differonces and local weaknesses contribute largely to democratic State strength. upon the national situation, since the na tional democratic ticket will everywher and compater. In point of fact they have been voting together local ly against the republican standpatter primary as well as general elections for several years. The standpatter, more over, proclaims with instant readiness that La Pollette and Cummins and now fights in the towns of Georgia and St. Bristow and Stubbs in Kansas are in Albans is certainly interesting. Both of reality democrats. The cleavage in the these places have five candidates for the West is patently not by party, and this being true-suggests a permanent puzzle. Here, as in the sonably satisfactory to the republican fortunes, but the republican anxiety is none the less real, not over what is in July and August, but over what may be in September and Outober In both regions there is a distinct element of hope for the democrats, and this s an invaluable asset after all the for-orn and hopeless years have gone The possibility, the very impressive possibility, of a democratic Congress as a result of all the local disturbances already noted deserves emphasis. There is bardly a State that the Sun's correspondent has visited which did not show evidence of democratic Congress gains: the factional fight among republicans seems to assure this. There is a manifest pos-sibility of the election of democratic governors in Indiana, Ohlo and Kansas There is also to be noted the not too remote possibility of democratic senators in Ohio and Indiana.

These details of themselves are significant; show that the situation is sufficently tense to demand infinite care and sustained effort. That west of the Aliechantes there is to be a real national campaign is an inevitable conclusion to be drawn from the briefest study of local conditions. Yet it is to be a national compaign in the main fought out locally. centested on issues that must of necessity be regarded as trivial and petty.

In the West the republican nations ticket seems to lack atterly the appeal of personality so far as its candidates are concerned, and in the central States the democratic ticket is so much dead weight to be carried, if at all, by the local candidates from the lack of necessity.

In the end it seems certain that no victory in November is not to be sneered until there is sufficient evidence to demmiddle West and the weakness of Bryan onstrate the partisan direction that the riot of liquid and economic morals and immorals will take. In August the plain advantage is with the republicans everythe end of the campaign it would seem where, save perhaps in Indiana, and even there Bryan's weakness is all impressive one of the two republican factions might.
