WHAT TO PLANT IN AUTUMN

Surprising Number of Trees, Shrubs and Perennials Which Grow in Fall as Well as the Spring.

Autumn has well been called nature's second spring, but how few gardeners seem to make the most of this opportunity, always overlooking the important fact that a number of things may be planted to much better advantage in the fall than in the spring.

Possibly one of the reasons why fall planting is not more generally practiced is because many of the things which are put in the autumn are trees, shrubs and roots, and to the average amateur gardener there seems to be a deep-seated fear of attempting to plant either trees or shrubs in any case, which is an absolutely groundless idea but remains nevertheless. To be sure, a tree or a shrub costs more than many packets of seeds, but it lasts for many years, whereas the seeds must be sown every year or two at the outside.

It will be well for the autumn gardener to bear in mind two things. The first that some of the things sown or planted in the fall have to make a comfortable growth before freezing sets in, while others remain dormant until spring. The second, that certain plants which may succeed finely when planted in the fall in one locality, will fail in another, although the conditions appear to be identical. In this latter case, observation and experience must be the teacher, as well as the hardness of the winter and character of the summer season. In localities, for instance, where long dry summers are the rule, fall planting will usually give the best results with all classes of plants for which the winter does not prove too severe.

THE GRAIN MARKET.

CHOICE OF HOSTELRIES.

"What is the best hotel?" the newcomer inquired. "The one down the street," replied the native, reflectively, "has the best dining room for dining. But the one around the corner has the best roof garden and skating rink. And—oh, yes, I nearly forgot—there's an establishment tavern up three or four blocks, where you might get something to eat."
