How they Cure Rheumatism in Pennsylvania.

Mr. J. F. Melghan, a Pittsburgh, Pa., cigar dealer, woke up one morning with an attack of rheumatism in his arm, working around the store during the morning made it worse so that by noon it was so painful he could not raise his arm to his head and had to carry it in a sling. A traveling man on learning of his condition went across the street to Mr. Heck's drug store and at his own expense procured a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Palm for Mr. Melghan who says: "After one night's bathing with this excellent medicine the pain, swelling and soreness had nearly all disappeared and by the second morning I was entirely well thanks to this valuable remedy." He is confident that it saved him a long siege of the rheumatism and was so much pleased that he filed the traveling man's pockets with his best cigars. For sale by Lapeyre Bros.

THE WARRIOR FALLEN.

Gen. Crook, Commander of the Division of the Missouri, Stricken Down Without Warning.

Heart Disease Supposed to Have Been the Cause of His Sudden Demise.

Brief Sketch of the Long and Honorable Military Career of the Renowned Indian Fighter.

CHICAGO, March 23.—Gen. George Crook died suddenly in his parlor at the Grand Pacific hotel shortly after 7 o'clock a. m. He arose about 6:30, and, after partially dressing himself, entered the parlor, where, as was his wont, he commenced to exercise with dumb bells. About fifteen minutes later his wife, who was sitting herself in the adjoining room, heard him call in a faint voice: "Mary! Mary!" Upon responding she found the general reclining upon the sofa and evidently in much pain. His hands were pressed over his heart and he was barely able to articulate.

His War Record.

Gen. George Crook was born near Dayton, Ohio, Sept. 5, 1825. He was graduated at the United States military academy in 1849, and was on duty with the Fourth infantry in California from 1852 to 1861. He was in the Rogue river expedition in 1856, and commanded the Pitt river expedition in 1857. In the latter he was wounded by an arrow. He had risen to a captaincy when, at the beginning of the war, he was assigned to the East and became colonel of the Thirty-fourth Ohio infantry. In 1862 he was wounded at a battle near Va. For his services at Antietam he was brevetted lieutenant colonel, U. S. A. He was actively engaged in several campaigns during the war and took part in the battles of Gettysburg and Vicksburg, and the capture of Vicksburg, March 18, 1863. He was numbered one of the volunteer service Jan. 15, 1868. July 28 he was commissioned lieutenant colonel Twenty-third infantry, U. S. A., and assigned to the district of Boise City, Idaho, and remained until 1872, actively engaged in Indian campaigns. In 1872 he was assigned to the Arizona district, where he quelled serious Indian disturbances. In 1875 he was sent to Wyoming where, at Powder river he defeated the only Sioux and Cheyenne band that he ever defeated. He continued his campaign in the Northwest with relentless vigor until, in May, 1877, all of the hostile tribes had yielded. In 1888 Gen. Crook resigned his commission and returned to Arizona, where he forced squatters to vacate the Indian lands. In the following year when the Chiricahua went on a raid, he pursued them and made the 400 deserters. During the two years following no depredations occurred, but in the spring of 1888 the Indians under Geronimo again went on the rampage. Gen. Crook pursued them and forced their surrender under conditions. The president declined to ratify his action and Gen. Sheridan telegraphed him that the only condition that would be met by Geronimo's band was that their lives would be spared. In the meantime Geronimo and some of his men escaped, and Gen. Sheridan having quelled his army, Gen. Crook was ordered to be relieved from the command of the department of Arizona. He was relieved and Gen. Miles sent to Arizona, where he served until his band surrendered and were taken to Florida, where they now are. For nearly four years there has been a bitter controversy over the surrender. Gen. Crook's friends claim that what could not have been accomplished without Gen. Crook's assistance was accomplished by Geronimo's band. This controversy has gained in intensity recently by the discussion of a bill which has passed the senate and is now pending in the house committee, providing for the removal of Gen. Crook to Fort Sill, I. T. Gen. Crook favored the removal and Gen. Miles opposed it. When relieved of the command of the department of Arizona, Gen. Crook was sent to Omaha in command of the department of the Platte. In 1888, on the retirement of Gen. Terry he was made a major general and sent to Chicago in command of the division of the Missouri.

GREAT LOSS AT CASCADE.

The Ice Bridge Melts and Disappears—Signs of Progress.

CASCADE, March 21.—To the Editor of the TRIBUNE: I regret very much to convey you some sad news. The citizens of Cascade, St. Clair and Chusnut valley for the past two days have been wearing long and care-worn faces over the loss of their ice bridge over the old Missouri river. Slowly and reluctantly it seemed to give way its winter fastening on the afternoon of the 19th. Many were the spectators on both the east and west shores of the great old Missouri river, watching and gazing at the huge ice bridge moving slowly but surely away.

THE FERRIES MOVE DOWN.

Soon after the break-up huge bergs of ice came rushing down the mighty current. It was one of nature's grand sights. Rolling, tumbling blocks shoving against the shores, butting and ramming. The old ferry boat against the dike and it looked as if she would be crushed, straining her immense cables to the utmost, and at one time it seemed that the St. Clair people, with all their skill and efforts, would have to give up the only remaining means they have of getting over to the railroad.

THE OLD FERRY AGAIN IN REQUEST.

Now Mr. Schramm, the boss ferryman, will have the serene pleasure for the next eight months or more in asking everyone who steps on and off the boat for a contribution. We will have to grin and bear it, until dame nature smiles on us again in the way of another ice-bridge, unless our good old dads and kind-hearted citizens come to our relief in the way of a good, strong iron one that will stand under the hot, burning sun as well as under the cold winter storms.

Stock and Business Matters.

Stock in this vicinity has wintered well and the loss is very light, but little more than the previous winter, it being confined principally to old cows and sucklers. Considerable hay will be left over. Business is picking up and the outlook seems promising for the year.
