

DIAMONDFIELD JACK POSES AS A DIME NOVEL HERO

Diamondfield Jack Davis, the famous "gun man," has returned to civilization from the wilds of Mexico, having added to his long series of adventures some exciting adventures with the Yaquis. When "Diamondfield Jack" happens to be in the hotel lobby, relating his adventures, you can't tear a bellboy away from the bench with a Chinese war gong. He is a real border character, compared to whose feats the greatest moving picture hero is only a spoiled film. He has been a cowpuncher, a gun man, a revolutionist, a miner, a millionaire, and has just come from a fierce Indian fight. Nevada having grown too tame, Davis went down the west coast of Mexico. That he had 'em was made evident when he returned the other day with a six-shooter in his back pocket and two derringers in his vest. The hotel corridors have been buzzing since with the story of his adventures, as follows: He was on his way, they say, to visit one of his new mining properties in an isolated region of the coast, when the Yaquis fell upon the party. They were riding horses with pack animals when the savages burst out upon them with a sudden and furious attack from ambush. Jack is an old border fighter. Repulsing the first attack, he rapidly entrenched his little band. Indians and white men settled down to a long, nerve-racking siege of "snipe shooting." Every time a head showed, a crack of a rifle answered. The white men were besieged for two or three days of hot fighting. The fight ended amazingly, with a tame and astonishing, "Why, dowdy do," from the redskins. It seems that Jack, some time during his adventurous career, had done the Yaqui chief a favor. When the Yaquis came near enough to distinctly see who the white men were, Jack was recognized and the fight was called off. This adventure would be about enough to last most men a life time, but it is a mere incident to some of the thrilling things that have happened to "Diamondfield Jack." As a mere boy he left home to come out on the cattle ranges of Idaho. Defending himself from the ruffians who infested every border town, Jack acquired several notches on his gun butt and became renowned as a gun fighter. On one occasion he was unjustly accused of murder, and by a curious twist of circumstances, was sentenced to be hanged. He was reprieved on the gallows, two of his cowboys making a wild ride to get there in time with the governor's order. His innocence was afterwards fully established. He was released just at the beginning of the Nevada gold rush. Sick of civilization and with a bitter heart, he took a burro and went alone into the wilderness. Before civilization saw him again, he had discovered and located the mines of Diamondfield, Nevada. At the time of the I. W. W. riots at Goldfield, Jack made himself nationally famous by his cool, vivid courage. On one never to be forgotten afternoon, when Goldfield was surging with a murderous mob and every one else was cowering in barricaded rooms, "Diamondfield Jack" made himself felt. In the course of the riot, some one in the mob happened to break on of "Diamondfield Jack's" office windows. He came out with a roar like a bull, a six shooter in each hand. There were in the mob, 500 to 600 armed men; but they turned and fled down the street, stumbling and falling over each other in their haste to get away. Jack chased them for two blocks. Then he stood in the middle of the street flourishing his two revolvers and daring the whole mob to come back and fight. But at each invitation to fight Jack had to raise his voice louder, for his audience was rapidly disappearing. They never came back to accept the def. After the last Goldfield strike, it is said that "Diamondfield Jack" lost most of his fortune and went to Mexico to seek new Eldorados.—Los Angeles Times.

AVIATORS FLY OVER HEADS OF FREIGHTERS

DE LAMAR, May 20.—Hats from the Pahrnagat valley have brought in reports of a flying machine carrying a woman and two men going north at the rate of forty miles an hour. The freighters picked up some printed circulars thrown from the flying machine. These circulars stated that the aeronauts were bound for Denver, but a postscript in hand-writing added, "if our fuel holds out." The teamsters said that the flying machine resembled in outline the pictures they had seen of the Wright brothers' biplanes. The machine was about 200 feet above the earth.

UNFROCKED PRIEST'S SAD STORY SINCE MARRIAGE

By Associated Press. OGDEN, Utah, May 20.—Twelve months on the rock pile, is the way James Ambrose Ryan, unfrocked Catholic priest, who renounced his vow of celibacy to espouse an Ogden telephone girl at Denver more than a year ago, describes the penance he intends to suffer in order to regain his standing in the church. This was Ryan's statement last night. He has been released on bail from the city jail, where he was placed Sunday after engaging in a fist fight with the father of his wife. He has employed an attorney to defend him on the charge of peace disturbance.

BEAR FLAGPOLE BLOWN DOWN BY THE GALE

SONOMA, May 20.—The historic Bear flagpole, which has stood in the plaza here since June 14, 1846, when Captain Ezekiel Merritt and a party of eleven men from Fremont's camp, 120 miles distant, to Sonoma, and captured Lieutenant Arci, has fallen as a result of the tormenting given it by the high wind last night. The citizens were so accustomed to seeing the pole withstand the elements year after year that no precautions were made to protect it.
