Abuse of Power.

What seems like a deliberate and unjustified abuse of the injunction power of the courts has developed in Seattle, where Judge Hanford, of the United States Circuit Court, has prohibited the city council from appropriating money for holding the recall election as to Mayor Gill.

The mayor has been charged with not enforcing the laws and with protecting the vice of the city, and after some agitation the decent people of the city got a recall election ordered, to oust the mayor from his seat in the way provided by the city charter. The mayor first sought an injunction in the state court, which declined to interfere; but the federal tribunal proved more amenable and issued the writ. The mayor alleged that the means adopted to secure the recall petition "included fraud, forgery and false official certificates."

But the peculiar feature of the matter is that the mayor's showing, which proved insufficient to warrant the interference of the state court, seems to have been ample for the circuit court to jump in.

As a matter of fact, there is absolutely no reason for the interference of the courts in domestic matters of this character. And, anyway, the petitioners sought only to try the mayor before what is, after all is said and done, the highest court in the land—the bar of public opinion. It was the people themselves, the very ones who gave him his office, who were to act as his judges under the recall, and if he dreaded another election by the same people who had put him into office it must be because he had good reason to fear their verdict. But the point of the whole incident is that it gives some degree of color to the contention that the courts are altogether too prone to abuse their power of injunction. Here is a case where their stepping in seems to have been altogether uncalled for.

Help the Library.

Benefit entertainments have been given for a good many causes in Tonopah. And they have been always well patronized, whether the object was one of charity, to assist some church or society, or what not. Protestants have helped Catholics, and Catholics have helped Protestants, and Jews have assisted both; men who never go to a show have bought tickets and turned out to an entertainment for a worthy local object. Always have the good people of Tonopah assisted a movement which aimed to promote the welfare of some local institution.

But the most important institution of all—and the most important in that it does the greatest amount of good—has been neglected. Despite the fact that it needs help to be properly maintained, and deserves it because it is doing good 365 days in the year, no one has ever suggested an entertainment to provide funds for the public library.

The library, it is true, is in receipt of some support from the county, but this is far from what is really required. It should have three times as many books on its shelves as it at present possesses, but there is no money on hand to buy them. Hence our suggestion. Now, let some of the real live and public-spirited ones get busy and devise a scheme to raise funds for the purpose.

Our public library is a far more important institution, exerts a wider influence for morals and for education, than most people realize. And, beyond this, it is of peculiar value to the stranger within our midst, who, because he is a stranger, must resort to it largely for his recreation. It is, while he is here, his club and his family all in one.

A hundred reasons might be enumerated why the library should be built up until it becomes one of the very best in the state. And we suggest some sort of benefit entertainment in the near future that will provide a fund for new and needed books.

Paintings for All.

There died at Antwerp but a few days since a landscape painter, Francois Lamariniere, of whom it was said, in obituary eulogy, many of his paintings are owned by Americans.

Should his paintings become the vogue, experience teaches, that though Lamariniere lies dead the supply will continue ample to the demand. The increasing number of Corots is proof that nothing equals the productive capacity of a painter after his decease. Ordinarily, death puts an end to mortal activities, but it is not the case with successful painters—their brushes know no rest beyond the grave. Even Murillo is still at work, and resourceful dealers see to it that the supply of Rembrandts is not exhausted.

We present our respectful compliments to the shade of Francois Lamariniere, many of whose paintings are owned in America, and assure him that in time's multiplying course far more of his paintings will be owned in America than he ever found time or had inclination to paint.

Some of the newspapers of the state are getting badly exercised because the Supreme Court has handed down a decision that the governor must accept the donation of $400,000 of North Carolina bonds tendered by an Eastern holder of the bonds who hoped this state would sue its Southern sister to make them good. We fail to see that Nevada has been tied up in a bok-knot in consequence. There is no law preventing the governor from gently putting these bonds away in the big safe in his office and letting them rest in peace. About the only one then who will be hurt will be the Eastern donor who hoped to make this state a catspaw and rid himself of the burden of a lawsuit. As for the defaulting state, the chances are that it is justified in objecting to the payment of the bonds. During the reconstruction period in the South most of the states below Mason and Dixon's line were saddled with bond issues for millions (for railroads, and what not), and for which no equivalent was ever rendered. The Brownlow administration in Tennessee, for example, sold an issue of some thirty millions in bonds issued for the construction of a new railroad, not a single tie or rail of which was ever laid. And most of the Southern states had a similar experience.

The news from Washington is that President Taft is going to refuse his sanction to Arizona's new constitution. The reasons for his proposed action are not stated in the dispatches, but the chances are that, as a lawyer, he resents the clause in the instrument which provides that judges shall be subject to the recall. This feature was the occasion of a bitter fight in the constitutional convention at Phoenix. There was a unanimous sentiment in favor of the recall as to public officials, but when it came to making it apply to judges on the bench it was argued—and quite justly, we think—that the jurist, handing down a decision required by the law as it stood, but one unpopular nevertheless, might be made an innocent victim of the recall. In other respects the new constitution is not so radical as is that of Oklahoma, and Taft's objections must be based upon the provision noted above.

No writer knows the best fruits of his own pen, as witness Kipling in consigning the "Recessional" to his waste-basket, whence it was rescued by a friend. And now, confirming the dictum, here is Bob Davis—brother of Sam, and formerly on the Carson Appeal, but now editor of Munsey's in New York—taking the dramatic world by storm with a little skit called "The Welcher," after his more ambitious attempt for the stage, "The Family," had fallen flat. Bob is making good in New York, and making us feel proud that he is a Nevadan. Whether he possesses more of the divine afflatus than Sam we are unadvised, but we are sure he is not more than half as lazy. Sam's doctor years ago cautioned him against overwork, and since then he has quit it altogether. In which perhaps lay the higher wisdom.

Goldfield's Consolidated's production for its last fiscal year was nearly $11,000,000, with an expense account of almost $3,000,000. Eight million dollars profit for the twelve months! It is a showing like this that sustains the lagging courage of investors in many other mining properties in the state that have so far failed to balance their books with anything but red ink. A significant feature of the recent annual statement of the Consolidated is that the value of its mines is placed at only $35,000,000—about what four years' product would total. This is an extremely low valuation. A hundred million would be nearer the true valuation, perhaps. The one thing certain, however, is that the Consolidated is the richest mine in the world today. And that is saying a good deal.

It is to be hoped the example of California—where the good roads movement has penetrated the legislature, and where there is likely to be some efficient remedial legislation in furtherance of it—will influence Nevada legislators to do something along the same line. There is no state in the Union that needs good roads more, and possesses fewer of them, than Nevada. Some of our highways are a disgrace to a civilized community. We haven't looked up the law on the subject, but if there is no such authorization in the statutes we hope the present legislature will pass a measure authorizing counties to issue bonds for road improvement. In no other way could public funds be more profitably expended at present.

Adropos of the controversy over the North Carolina bonds given this state as a Xmas present, it may not be generally known that one of Nevada's counties (Lincoln) had a little racket of its own over a bond issue. In 1872 the county issued bonds which later with interest amounted to over $500,000. These bonds the county later tried to repudiate, but the Supreme Court very justly held that since the bonds had fallen into the hands of innocent purchasers the county must make good. The court, of course, could decide in no other way after the bonds were taken up by innocent people, as the principle of law at issue was elemental and fundamental.

Isn't it about time something was moving as regards the recovery of the county funds deposited in Mr. Golden's dollar-for-dollar bank? The claim outlaws in three years, and to date there has been a mighty poor showing made in the matter. The Bonanza wishes to see these suits prosecuted vigorously, and if it will accelerate matters any, institute a few criminal actions against the responsible officers of the defunct bank. Perhaps this might stir them up a trifle. The county treasury would look a whole lot different with that missing $60,000 on hand.

The bill introduced in the California state senate to pension schoolteachers need not excite apprehension of padded rolls. It provides that pensioners must be 60 years old.
