ON TO THE TANANA.

A few weeks ago word of the completion of the railroad from Cordova up the Copper river to the Bonanza copper mines was given out. Within the month has the first real shipment of copper ore been sent out from these mines, and from now on it may be expected that a regular output will be maintained.

The ultimate objective point of this road, however, is said not to be the Bonanza mines, where it now ends, but the Tanana river valley—a fertile agricultural region—and the copper and gold deposits at the headwaters of the Tanana and the White rivers. Here there are vast deposits of copper, the richest copper ores in quantity ever known to the world. One nugget found at the headwaters of the White is said to have weighed three tons. The placer deposits of these regions, also, have been productive for several years, and their output is to be reckoned in the millions.

Though the country around the headwaters of these rivers is very rugged, the mountains ranging up to 12,000 feet in height, the fact that this road is now well into the region apparently would make it a comparatively easy matter to complete the work of opening up the mineral country that lies in Eastern Alaska and the Yukon.

An Alaskan paper calls attention to another road that is also making plans to tap this section. This road, as proposed, would start at Haines, which lies in Southern Alaska, above Juneau and not far from Skagway, at the head of navigation. It would pass up the Porcupine, through the Klunne and to the Tanana by way of the White river.

This road would open a rich placer region in the Klunne, which lies in Yukon territory, making possible the working of the ground by dredges and hydraulic plants; beside reaching the mineral region at the head waters of the White and the Tanana. Throughout its length it would pass through a mineralized country, held back now only by the lack of transportation.

Near this line, bearing to the northeast, is the road which was built a few years ago to open up the Yukon. This road starts at Skagway and runs over White Pass to White Horse, at the headwaters of the Yukon. It has been an important factor in the development of this portion of the Yukon.

Similarly these other roads, when completed as planned, will prove of incalculable benefit in opening practically unexploited portions of Alaska and the Yukon.

MUNICIPAL GAS IN MANCHESTER.

Manchester, England, has been achieving some good results in its municipal gas department. The current report just issued shows that the lowest rate ever imposed on consumers has resulted in the greatest profits on record in the department.

The gross profits for the year was $925,223, of which $225,008 was paid for interest on loans, leaving a net profit of $700,215. Of this sum the gas department turned over to the city fund $226,293 to relieve the people of the city in the reduction of rates. Here is a concrete example of Old World paternal government modernized up-to-date.

Americans have been afraid of paternalism in government. The politicians have played upon the cultivated this feeling while conscienceless corporations have pretty much had their own way in our great American municipalities. But Americans are rapidly tiring of this devil-take-the-hindmost idea and popular prejudice against protecting the public against the greed of morally irresponsible exploiters is on the wane. The municipalization of public utilities is correspondingly on the increase.

A wife has demanded a divorce on the ground that her husband has been tongue-tied for seven years. It is an absolute certainty that no husband will ever demand a divorce on those grounds.

Although his neck has been broken twice, a Colorado man yet lives. Let him not boast. He may step on a banana skin and crack his skull ere summer wanes.

"Americans are spoiled by luxury," declares Admiral Togo. Oh, we dunno; there's quite a bunch of us who don't own autos, private yachts or airships yet, admiral.

A GOOD OLD PRINCIPLE.

With the exception of the United States supreme court's application of the rule of reason to the degree of restraint of trade, as laid down in the Standard Oil and Tobacco Trust cases, no recent decision has occasioned so general comment as that of Judge De Graff which put a quick end to the street car strike in Des Moines, Iowa. It is likely to be misunderstood by many, however.

Like the supreme court rulings—like most rulings as they are hastily reported in the telegraphic dispatches—the legal application of Judge De Graff's decision was not at first clear. It now appears that instead of enunciating a new principle in law, he was only enunciating an old common law principle that is too seldom embodied in rulings that have to do with vital public rights.

Judge De Graff said in substance to the street car company: "You are a party to an important contract with the community. By one of your acts you have precipitated a turmoil that threatens to make it impossible for you to fulfill your part of the contract. This court is here to enforce the fulfillment of contract pledges. Its duty is to command you to do so in this case, or suffer the consequences."

The consequences, probably, would have been a forfeiture of valuable rights by reason of breach of contract. So the company, under good legal advice, decided that it were better to bear the ills it had (the ultimatum of employees over a discharged man) than to fly to others it knew not of—the loss of very valuable franchises being a possible.

The agents of the contracting party—the striking employees—were only an incident in the court decision, important as its results were to them. Doubtless they are in high glee over the thing, but it is conceivable that the next to feel the force of the principle laid down by the Des Moines judge might be a labor union.

HELPING OTHERS.

Nevada, because she is a state sparsely populated, and has for fifty years past been giving up her wealth to the upbuilding of other states and the nation with little profit to herself in material growth and development, is looked upon with derision by the inhabitants of some of the more densely populated states. Yet we who know that in energy and ability, in truth and loyalty, in manliness and womanliness they are surpassed by none.

In proportion to her number we believe Nevada has brought to the world more with the stamp of greatness upon them than any other state can boast of. Nevada is not a land of the weakling and the degenerate. It is a land of truth and strength and endeavor, and only to those with such qualities do the mountains and plains, the precious metals and the fertile lands and running waters of this great empire hold out their allurements. The name "Nevadan" is one by which we are all proud to be called and of which only a man among men is worthy.—Las Vegas Age.

Zinc has passed the $6 mark on the New York metal market and is still on the upward grade. The advance on price is said to be due to the great increase in its use throughout the world, and a continued advance is looked for. This is welcome news to the great zinc district of Southern Nevada and should result in bringing much capital to that section during the next year or so.

The death of William R. Laidlaw in New York recalls the circumstances that Russell Sage, when threatened by a crank with a bomb, pulled Laidlaw between himself and the peril. Explosion of the bomb rendered Laidlaw a cripple for life. Sage refused to allow the injured man any recompense, declining even to pay his hospital bills.

The people of California would like to have the state text-book scandal probed to the very bottom. Are the school text-books changed for the benefit of the publishers?

President Benjamin Ide Wheeler had a kick coming while he was up in the Sierras. "Take it from me," said the burro, and the college president admits that he got it.

Arizona has had such a hard time breaking into the game that she will have little trouble remembering the date of her admission as a state.

America is laying the keel of the biggest battleship the world has ever seen. No wonder the powers want a peace protocol with the United States!

Ten millions more of American money has been loaned in Mexico. This increases by so much our benevolent interest in that country.

The Connecticut state grange has refused to participate in a state fair reception to President Taft. No reciprocity about that.

Admiral Togo realized, naturally, that the 14-inch guns into which he had the pleasure of looking, were not for ornament alone.

But Dr. Wiley's real trouble will only begin when he attempts to find out what some of the soda fountain decoctions are.

Many of the rare metals are to be found in Nevada, which fast is being recognized by the prospectors.

PITCHED BATTLE IN THE CITY OF JUAREZ

JUAREZ, Mex., Aug. 15.—A pitched battle occurred in this city yesterday morning about 3 o'clock between the mounted police and the night patrol of ex-insurrecto soldiers. The entire city was awakened and for some time it was feared that a band of liberals had attacked the town. The shooting, however, was the result of a mistake. An American, J. P. Le Point, had been held up and robbed in Juarez of $400 and railway tickets, and when the mounted police started to look for the robber they met the soldiers and thought they were the robbers. The soldiers thought the police were liberals and the fight opened in the heart of the city. Scores of shots were fired, but no one was seriously hurt. The holdup man escaped.

Why Send Out of Town for Your Printing

When you can have first-class work done right here, by first-class union printers.

The business man who sends out of town for his printing injures his own business as well as that of others. While on the other hand the man who patronizes home institutions increases the town's pay roll, and thereby builds up his business.

The printers and book binders in the cities of surrounding states do not come here to spend their money.
