Reviews Law Situation From the Stand of an Average American Citizen

(By Felix Nott in Carson Appeal.) I like the people better now than I am not a philosopher—just a plain every-day sort of fellow who has no particular ethics and would not know an ethic from a dodo if I saw one coming in the front door, and yet I have no quarrel with these people who are so ethical that it hurts them.

I do protest, however, against being legally restrained from witnessing a boxing contest or being branded a criminal if I choose to participate in a few hands of the great American national game of poker with a few old cronies for just enough stakes to make it interesting. In other words, somewhere down in my veins flows a few drops of sporting blood, and I claim the same right to pander to them as I do to my stomach. Now if you think I am going to prepare a brief for prize fighting or gambling in its every attitude and worst form, you have guessed wrong. I have seen prizefights and have seen gambling games where everybody participating ought to have been shot. There is an extreme point to everything which ought to be prohibited. But you can be just as extreme the other way.

I know the father of a family in this city who is a very pious and a very good man, according to his lights. His children have never seen a moving picture, and they well know that if they did attend, parental knowledge of the fact would be immediately followed by a Christian lambasting that would make sitting down anything but a pleasure for many days to follow. So these children are denied the educational privileges of one of the very greatest inventions of the century, and why? (The father himself has never seen one). Because some pictures are doubtless improper! As well refuse to read all books, including the Bible, because some books are immoral. Now, he is a very good man—so good it must hurt. I am not speaking of him as an individual, but as a type. What sort of a world would it be if we were all like him?

It would be the kind of world today, it was during the time from which he receives his inspiration and in which he still lives. Now Christ, notwithstanding "that he went forth" into the world to spread the good news, was never any further away from the hut in which he was born than from Carson City to Yerington. If Christ's mother and her husband ever journeyed to neighboring villages, Joseph rode the donkey and Mary walked behind and carried the freight, just as our mahalas do at the present time; and the family they went to visit lived in a mud or stone hut without a floor, which the roof and sunny sides of the walls were plastered with cow dung which, when it fell off as considered dry enough to furnish fuel for the dainties of the culinary department. Now it is perfectly proper, for those who wish, to take that age and its people as moral examples, but for creature comforts and mental palladium I prefer the present age, and I think did then. At least they bathe much oftener.

Regulate your boxing contests and gambling, but do not attempt to abolish them. Hedge them about with such safeguards that the devastating influence of unbridled license is removed, but do not attempt to crush out of the nation its militant spirit and its native gambling instincts. Most members of the race with red blood in their veins enjoying physical contests in some form or another. It may be as boxing contests, races, football, basketball, or what not, but the instinct that worships naval and military heroes is present in every normal man, and woe to the nation when it shall cease.

We are all gamblers. We all like to take a chance in some form or other. If it doesn't find form in drawing to a four-card flush it probably looms up in a real estate speculation, or the purchase of life insurance. Some of my friends are even so absolutely degenerate that they gamble in mining stocks, that is, those of them who have any money left from former similar experience.

It is the gambling, militant spirit, held under proper restraint, that builds our great railroads, our steamship lines; that finances and perfects our great inventions; that experiments with flying machines, and that spells material progress for the nation. Suppose all mankind were like my example of the man whose children are taught to shun a moving picture house, like any one of the disciples would have shied at a bathtub. In the first place America would never have been discovered; but if it had by accident, the few inhabitants of the Atlantic coast would never know there was a Pacific ocean, and we would not be very far removed from the hut with the manure-plastered roof.

I have no patience with those people whose morals can't sleep comfortably at night because Nevada has a law which has made possible four or five prizefights in fourteen years, while in every other state they are held every day in the week. All this talk about repealing the law at a special session of the legislature sounds like buncombe—pure bunk, to me. If the law is to be tampered with at all, change it to make it possible for regulated boxing contests to take place with greater frequency—make them all amateur contests if you will—but don't place the scarecrow of the law on the noblest of athletic sports. Protect the callow youth from temptation to embezzle his employer's funds to play at the percentage game, but you can't keep four or five old cronies from gathering at the home of one of their number and playing poker for a penny ante, any more than you can legally restrain them from filling up their favorite pipes and making the atmosphere of the room look like a scene in a Chicago stock yard smoke house.

Regulation and not bigoted prohibition is the solution of most evils.

OPPOSITION TO NEW BASIS FOR ASSESSING MINES

A commission has been appointed by Governor Hawley of Idaho to provide a new basis for assessing the mining property of that state. The first draft of the new law as prepared by this commission has received much adverse critical comment, owners of mining property stating that if such a law is passed by the state legislature at the coming session it will be a death blow to the mining industry and file the same with the assessor. Thereupon the assessor shall add to the amount of such estimate 25 per cent thereof, and the value of the surface land, and if such surface land has no value for other than mining purposes, the average valuation of all patented non-mineral lands in the county shall be deemed the full and true values of such land. In the event that there is no ore in sight the value of the surface land as hereinbefore defined shall be assessed.

Improvements on mining claims or ground, whether patented or not, shall be assessed as other improvements on land. All assessments herein provided for shall be extended on the assessment list as real property in case the ground is patented, or as personal property in case the title to the ground is still in the United States.

"Sec. 2. Chapter 4 of Title 16 of the political code of the revised codes of Idaho, being Sections 1862 to 1872, inclusive, of the said revised codes is hereby repealed.

"Sec. 3. An emergency existing, therefore this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its approval."—Mining World.

APPOINTMENT OF ENGINEER FOR THE BUREAU OF MINES

Director Holmes of the bureau of mines is to be congratulated on his first appointment of real interest to the metal mining interests of the United States. This appointment has gone to Dwight E. Woodbridge of Duluth, Minn., one of America's most promising young engineers. Mr. Woodbridge's duties, as consulting engineer for the bureau of mines, will be an investigation into iron-mining conditions in the United States for the purpose of indicating the progress that is being made in the mining, transportation, exploration, conservation, concentration, etc., of iron ores, and the sanitation, welfare and ethical steps undertaken by mining companies.

This announcement is of importance to the metal-mining interests generally, as we are advised that this appointment is to be followed by the appointment of other engineers whose work will be of a similar nature, but devoted to other chief minerals and to metallurgy.—Mining World.

DAISY WORKINGS IN GOOD SHAPE

BOTH PRINCIPAL SHAFTS RETIMBERED; LATERAL WORK IS IN PROGRESS.

Active work is in progress on the Goldfield Daisy, where both the No. 1 and No. 2 shafts are being repaired and a drift is being driven from the No. 2 shaft to penetrate an ore shoot from which the company took some ore of excellent grade during its operations. This shaft will be unwatered to the bottom, a depth of 520 feet, and a crosscut will be sent to the north-east in the effort to find ore in the main Belmont vein, which traverses this ground.

The main shaft, known as the No. 2 shaft, has been retimbered where repairs were needed to a depth of 700 feet, and the station on that level prepared for extensive lateral work. The No. 1 shaft is now in good condition, having been cleaned out and repaired to the 210-foot level, and a drift is being driven to explore the southern extension of the big vein from which the Goldfield Belmont is taking rich ore. Manager de Costa reports that excellent progress is being made in this work.—Tribune.
