TOKIO, Japan, Sept. 13.—Passing in magnificence through the silent ranks of hundreds of thousands of the subjects who in life honored him as a god the body of the late Emperor Mutsuhito of Japan was borne this evening through the deadened streets of Tokio for his public funeral services at the Aoyama parade-ground. The actual burial of the late ruler will be held tomorrow at Momoyama, near Kioto, where lie the ashes of Emperor Kwammu, mikado of a thousand years ago.

More than 2,000,000 people saw the last public honors paid to the Japanese emperor who saw his country emerge from semi-barbarism to become one of the leading powers of the world. Massed by hundreds of thousands they stood as the splendid cortege wound through the capital city while evening fell, closed doors and windows hermetically sealed behind them, while over the smart military uniforms of New Japan and the flowing silks of an older day flared thousands of torches in the hands of soldiers who formed a solid avenue of flame from the palace gates to the place of ceremony.

Promptly at 6 o'clock the whole Imperial Guards division, 10,000 strong, paraded in front of the imperial palace. At 7 o'clock the signal was given for the departure of the imperial coffin and instantly the whole body of trumpeters of the guards blew the hymn of national mourning in a low and melancholy tone.

Immediately the casket enclosing the remains of the dead mikado was brought forth and placed upon the funeral car, gorgeous with decoration and in front of which blazed the imperial crest of chrysanthemums. Harnessed to the funeral car were the four mandariishi, or sacred bullocks, especially selected according to immemorial custom for the obsequies of the ruler who is half god. The first ox was black from nose to tip of tail, the second all black save for a white stripe on the forehead, the third all brown except for a black line from nose to tail and the fourth black with white markings nearly a piebald.

As soon as the body of the dead ruler rested upon its bier a sharp order detached about 5000 of the imperial guards who, at a slow march, passed out of the palace grounds into the jammed but silent streets. Behind them fell in the bands of Shinto priests always attendant on the mikado and certain other functionaries bearing aloft white and yellow flags, bows and arrows, shields, halberds, Sakaki (sprigs of the god tree) and the imperial bands. Then came the court officials, headed by the master of the imperial household and then the emperor's coffin.

The casket was attended by six chamberlains and 20 army and navy officers as pall bearers; the grand

FINAL TRIBUTE IS PAID TO THE MEMORY OF JUDGE J. F. DENNIS

Impressive services marked the ceremony held over the remains of the late Judge J. F. Dennis, as held this afternoon at the Elks' hall under the auspices of that order of which the deceased was an honored and respected member during his life time. The public burial ritual was complied with, for the fourth time since the Elks' lodge was instituted in this city. Following the services the remains were escorted to the Elks' plot in the cemetery where the body was placed in its final resting place.

A large number of friends and acquaintances gathered at the Elks' hall to pay a last tribute to the memory of the man whom they had honored and respected during his life time, and the spacious lodge room was crowded. Exalted Ruler Ed Malley called the lodge to order in the memorial session while many local and visiting members participated in the ritualistic form that was followed.

The eulogy was delivered by Hon. P. M. Bowler, a lifelong friend of the deceased and fellow member of the bar association. Mr. Bowler spoke in stirring terms, and at times his articulation was difficult, owing to his emotions.

"Exalted ruler and friends," said Mr. Bowler, "we have assembled here to extend a parting salute and to pay a tribute to our departed brother, and I know that no words of mine can alleviate the sorrow of his widow, his family and you, his friends. Let me remind you all how superlatively grand and consoling is that of death. The expectation of living here, and living thus always, would indeed be a prospect of overwhelming despair.

"Cullen, during his dying moments, in a whispered voice, said: 'I wish I had the power of writing or speaking, for then I would describe to you how pleasant a thing it is to die.'

"My friends, we sometimes congratulate ourselves at the moment of waking from a troubled dream. It may be so the moment after death, and we should not by lamentations and mournful chants attend the funeral of a good man for by his demise he enters upon the heritage of a diviner life.

"Socrates it was who admonished us to be of good cheer about death and know this of truth, that no evil can happen to a good man, either in life or after death."

"I have known our departed brother, Judge Dennis, as he was familiarly called, for nearly 40 years. Our personal friendship was never interrupted in the slightest degree. I speak understandingly, with perhaps more depth of feeling of his loyal greatness than almost any man in the state.

"He was a man of sterling worth, possessed of a generous heart, for many a poor sufferer has found relief from his charitable hand. He was ever ready, by night or day, to extend his help, in a round heaping measure, for the uplift of humanity and always took a zealous interest in such matters.

"His word was ever accepted as a bond. He was a man, of whom can be said, that he never made a promise he could not fulfill, and never made one that he did not keep, and when once he became your friend it was friendship to the end. He never broke a friendship, and the greatness of his heart was such that he could never lose a friend that he had once drawn to him.

"There was no office within the gift of the electors of this state, whether it was a high judicial, executive or legislative, the duties of which he was not fully qualified to discharge with honor and distinction; but with all his ability and fitness for positions of the highest honor and trust, he was modest and did not thrust himself forward as a candidate for office, but rather avoided the strife and struggle for place, lending his assistance, and he was ever holding himself in readiness to perform and did perform valuable and heroic service for his party and his friends.

"He was a man of patriotism and his public efforts were well calculated to promote the general welfare of the state and the community in which he lived.

"In his profession he was not gifted with oratorical power or eloquence. He represented and possessed the earnest and virile advocacy of the western lawyer, broad in principle, persuasive in argument, always courteous and kindly to court and opposing counsel but unfailingly aggressive and forceful. He was sagacious and prudent, having a high order of legal capacity, and leaves upon the record of his practice in Nevada the impress of his ability and character. Though gigantic in form and towering in size, he was in fact to his friends, among whom I was proud to be numbered, the gentlest of men. I have reason to lament his loss and to sympathize with those who were dear to him, but

"The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power, And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave, Await alike the inevitable hour; The path of glory leads but to the grave."

"To you, my deceased friend, for whom I have always entertained a high regard, and as a parting salutation I say: Hope whispers we shall meet again and I cherish the hope. Farewell."

The cortege to the cemetery was one of the largest ever witnessed in Tonopah. At the grave services were again held as the remains were being lowered.

The bereaved family has been in receipt of many telegrams since the death of Judge Dennis, the senders residing in all parts of Nevada expressing sorrow for the untimely end of the husband and father. A large number of messages were received from intimate friends, while others were from persons who were associated with the deceased during his residence in the eastern part of the state.
