SENATOR MASSEY UPHELD RIGHTS OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES TO ORGANIZE FOR THEIR OWN MUTUAL BENEFIT

During the last session of congress Senator W. A. Massey was one of the main factors in the fight of the postal employees, who were desirous of forming an organization for their mutual benefit. Senator Massey took the floor of the senate on behalf of the postal employees and on August 13 delivered the following address, which thoroughly gives his ideas on the subject of the rights of an American citizen:

Mr. Massey said:

"Mr. President: I desire to say that I do not believe the language of the amendment of the senator from Missouri (Mr. Reed) meets the objection that has been raised to the amendment now pending before the senate. I apprehend there is not in existence any labor organization that imposes an obligation upon the part of its members to strike against the United States; but the limitation in the amendment offered by the senator from Missouri does not meet a condition that actually exists under labor conditions in this country. I apprehend that, so far as the several organizations are concerned, it has never been necessary, and is not necessary now, to incorporate either into their constitutions or other instruments which define their rights or the rights of their several members an obligation not to strike against the United States, because they have not been employed as an organization, and, as an organization, have no employment, contractual or otherwise, with the United States. Strikes may arise in different organizations against employers which might possibly involve other organizations carrying a membership of employees of the government.

ator from Missouri does not meet a condition that actually exists under labor conditions in this country. I apprehend that, so far as the several organizations are concerned, it has never been necessary, and is not necessary now, to incorporate either into their constitutions or other instruments which define their rights or the rights of their several members an obligation not to strike against the United States, because they have not been employed as an organization, and, as an organization, have no employment, contractual or otherwise, with the United States. Strikes may arise in different organizations against employers which might possibly involve other organizations carrying a membership of employees of the government.

"Mr. President, I want at this time to say that we are getting a little bit heated over this discussion; that we are disposed to talk about the rights of the citizen and the rights of the congress to legislate as though the rights of the citizen and the rights of congress under the constitution were not in harmony. I apprehend there can be no controversy about the proposition that there are certain things congress can not do. It can not take my property without giving me an opportunity to be heard in a court of justice; it can not take from me my liberty without a hearing and a trial.

"There are certain inalienable rights carried into the constitution that this congress can not dispose of; but we must not lose sight of the additional fact that the government of the United States, within the scope and function of legalized government, can do anything in the way of legislation for the purpose of carrying out successfully the functions of government; in other words, the constitution of the United States provides for a postal establishment; and this congress, with the approval of the president of the United States, can pass legislation that will efficiently and successfully control the postal department, even though in that legislation it might be necessary to exclude from the employment of the postoffice department a person who belongs to a union. Although their rights and the rights of the government are mutual, this government can not surrender any of its sovereignty or its functions of government to anybody.

"In this connection I desire to say, Mr. President, that, so far as labor unions are concerned, people have a right to organize in unions, to unite in unions for the purpose of uplifting themselves in their employment, for the purpose of securing better hours, for the purpose of securing higher wages, for the purpose of higher development, and for many other purposes; but no organization has a right to carry into its organization or into its obligations anything that would cripple the administration of the government in any of the lines provided for by the constitution, either in a navy yard, in the navy department, in the postoffice department, or in any of the other departments of the government; and whenever this congress recognizes the right by legislation, directly or indirectly, of an individual or a collection of individuals, by concerted action, to interfere with or to disturb the administration of governmental affairs such as are directly provided for by the constitution and must exist if we are to have government at all, they have recognized the right of revolution, and it means revolution.

"I want to say to the senate that I am quite willing that there shall be crystallized into legislation by the senate the right of all or any of the employees in any branch of the government service to organize for their mutual interest, benefit, and protection within the lines of their employment under the government. I want to say further that I am quite willing that there shall be written into the law of this country a provision securing the right of every citizen, no matter what his occupation may be, whether he be an employee of the government or whether he be a humble citizen without employment, to come to congress with his grievances; but a right to be heard by congress for any alleged wrong, a right to be heard by congress upon any matter involving his uplift, is a constitutional right that need not to be carried into the laws of this country. They can come here in twos or threes or hundreds if they desire and we have to hear them, and if they have a wrong it ought to be remedied.

"Believing this, I shall vote against any measure that would extend, except with limitations so as to protect the government in the administration of its affairs, the right of employees to belong to unions or organizations which might—not which shall, but which might—involve the administration of any one of the departments of the government; but I shall be willing to extend to the employees of this government the right to organize, the right to maintain organizations for the purpose of uplifting, and helping them in their vocation in life and in all matters in which they are interested so far as home life and individual life may be concerned."
