ing. An ovation greeted them. Tramping close behind came the first battalion of army engineers, the 17th U. S. Infantry and band from Fort McPherson, Ga., and a regiment of coast artillery from Fort Monroe. The crack seventeenth, in full marching order, a solid column of full dress service blue, swinging easily to the lively music of their band, made a splendid appearance.

Commanding no less interest than the West Point cadets came the midshipmen from Annapolis. In their regulation short navy blue jackets and tan leggings, the young sailors were received with waves of cheer.

But now the assembled thousands sent up a new roar. A regiment of blue jackets turned into the avenue. They tramp along briskly, with the rolling quick-step of men who are not strangers to the sea. A squadron of the fifteenth cavalry, a battalion of the third field artillery and a detachment of the signal corps brought up the rear of the division of regulars.

Then marched the second division, made up of militia. Delaware's troops led, headed by the governor and his staff. New Jersey—President Wilson's own state—sent its entire militia establishment, including a battalion of naval reserves. In line came the state troops of Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Maryland, Georgia, Connecticut, Virginia, North Carolina, Rhode Island, Maine, Michigan, Ohio and other states. Militia representation from the states was not so great this year as at previous inaugurations, but there was a greater representation of regular troops. Indiana—Vice President Marshall's state—was totally unrepresented. Many of the states, however, which did not send troops because of the long distance to be traveled were represented by their governors and staffs in the fourth grand division.

Cadets from the Carlisle Indian school, in their uniforms of cadet blue, were a subject of remark in contrast with the remnant of their ancestors, who marched wrapped in multi-colored blankets and in full feathers and war paint. Cadet battalions from the Virginia military institute and Culver military academy brought up the rear of that section.

The third division, made up of veteran and patriotic organizations, was suggestive of the fast diminishing ranks of the veterans of the north and south. Both sections were represented, the nearby northern states and the District of Columbia furnishing the larger number of men in blue, with here and there the men in gray mingling with their former adversaries.

The fourth grand division, composed of civic bodies, was probably the most diverse of all. Two hundred cowboys and Indians from Maricopa county, Arizona, performed a perfect wild west show along the line of march, throwing lariats, giving exhibitions of trick riding and broncho busting.

Tammany hail, 1500 strong, headed by two bands, each "brave" topped with a pure white silk beaver, and carrying a red, white and blue umbrella, accompanied by 35 "real Indians" in full tribal regalia, was marching at the inauguration of the first democratic president in 20 years.

Foremost in this civic division came the Woodrow Wilson club of Trenton. And then came fully 3000 college students from all parts of the country. Princeton, in honor of its former president, had 1000 men in line, who marched in cap and gown, each wearing a Princeton badge on his left arm. The Duxbury club of Cincinnati, with 500 marchers in white overcoats and dark red umbrellas, was a noteworthy patch of color in the whole scheme.

Other notable organizations in the line were the Jefferson club of Philadelphia, the Iroquois club of San Francisco, the Mose Green club of Pennsylvania, with its famous band enlisted during the war, the Indiana club of Indianapolis, and countless other clubs, many in showy uniforms and with striking devices.

Some of the governors who rode in the inaugural procession were with the military organizations of their states and others rode with their brilliantly uniformed staffs in the last division.

When the head of the column came to the point where Pennsylvania avenue swings around the treasury and continues on out past the White House, it halted briefly until President Wilson and his party took their places in the reviewing stand.

Mr. Taft, according to custom, had ridden back to the White House with his successor to say farewell. It is the usual custom, occasionally varied, for the outgoing president to return to the White House and take his leave at the White House portico, but it is not the custom for him to review the procession. He usually joins his family at once and leaves the city.

The marching columns halted while this formal leave-taking was going on, and then pressed forward in review. To stirring marches, patriotic airs and popular ditties, the marchers swept on past the presidential box, all military organizations coming to salute to their new commander-in-chief, some executing manoeuvres. The new president with bared head acknowledged all these formalities and kept up a running fire of comment with members of his party on the smart appearance of the various organizations.

Past the president and his party the procession continued out Pennsylvania avenue to Washington Circle, and there disbanded. The president returned to the White House, and the multitude, in the absence of an inaugural ball or a reception, looked forward to the display of illuminations and fireworks after sundown.

WILSON IS INAUGURATED AS NEW PRESIDENT

being passed in the last hour of the expiring 62 congress. The cabinet of the outgoing president accompanied him, to inspect the newly passed bills pertaining to their departments and to advise the president as to his signature or veto.

Meanwhile the senate and house of representatives were pressing matters to a final conclusion, in the hurry to have all legislative business cleared well before noon. In the house there were the usual closing exercises, with resolutions of thanks to the speaker. It was the aim of the leaders to close the proceedings sufficiently before noon to permit the membership of the house to march in a body to the senate wing of the capitol, there to take the seats set apart for them in the senate chamber for the inauguration ceremonies of the vice president.

Senate galleries were thronged early with a brilliant assemblage in which women largely predominated, their gowns and hats giving a gala appearance to the upper portion of the chamber. The diplomatic galleries were strictly reserved for the families of the representatives of foreign governments, and the president and vice president's galleries for the families of the incoming and outgoing executives. Until the ceremonies of inaugurating the new vice president began these animated galleries were the entire center of attraction.

The program provided for the entrance of the supreme court, the house and other bodies at specified intervals, from 11:30 to noon, leading up to the actual ceremonies. While the supreme court was being announced and the sombre-robed justices, accompanied by the officers of the court, found large leather chairs placed along the front row of the chamber, facing the vice president, and at his right, the diplomatic corps, brilliantly arrayed in full state costume, assembled in the outside corridor prepared to enter in a body.

When the supreme court was announced, Chief Justice White leading the procession entered the senate chamber, followed by Associate Justices Lamar, Hughes, McKanna, Holmes, Lurton, Day, Van Devanter and Pitney.

The representatives of foreign nations came next, headed by Ambassador Jusserand of France, dean of the diplomatic corps in the absence of the venerable Baron Hengelmueller, the ambassador of Austria, who is absent from his post on leave and is not to return.

The Rt. Hon. James Bryce, the British ambassador, was next, followed in order of seniority by Count Von Bernstorff, the ambassador from Germany; Youssouf Zia Pacha, the ambassador from Turkey; the Marquis Cusani Confalmeri, the ambassador from Italy; Senor De Gama, the ambassador from Brazil; George Bakmatoff, the ambassador from Russia; the Viscount Chinda, ambassador from Japan, and followed by the ministers and their suites from Portugal, Bolivia, Salvador, Netherlands, Venezuela, Switzerland, Greece, China, Spain, Ecuador, Norway, Nicaragua, Cuba, Argentina, Uruguay, Chile, Belgium, Haiti, Guatemala, the Dominican Republic, Peru, Sweden, Siam, Colombia, Honduras, Denmark, Panama and Persia. The ambassadors and ministers have seats immediately behind the space reserved for the cabinet.

Meanwhile the house of representatives, formed in double line down the long corridor toward the house wing of the capitol, and accompanied by the members-elect soon to take places in the next congress, marched slowly to the senate door, and, headed by Speaker Clark, for whom a seat had been placed on the rostrum at the left of Senator Gallinger, as president protempore of the senate, found seats reserved on the west side of the chamber, the east being held for senators and others.

Other places reserved in the chamber were for Admiral Dewey and his aide; Major General Leonard Wood, chief of staff of the army, and his aide, the officers of the army and navy, who by name have received the thanks of congress. Among these were Rear Admiral Peary, the distinguished Arctic explorer. When this part of the program was carried out the next move was to escort the president, president-elect and vice president-elect to the chamber. The two most conspicuous seats in the chamber were reserved for Mr. Wilson and Mr. Marshall, both of which faced the presiding officer, Mr. Wilson's in the front row to the right of the main aisle, and Mr. Marshall's to the left. Seats for the cabinet and committee of arrangements were close by.

With the entrance of President Taft and President-elect Wilson at the main door of the senate, escorted by the committee on arrangements, and the entrance of Mr. Marshall and Senator Gallinger, also escorted by the same committee, the stage was set for the inauguration of the new vice president.

First in the order of the proceedings was the administering of the oath of office to Vice President Marshall. Arising from his seat among the senators, the new vice president was escorted to the senate rostrum, to the right of the presiding officer. The office of vice president being vacant by the death of James S. Sherman, the administration of the oath to the new vice president fell to the lot of Senator Gallinger. This was a brief ceremony, followed with impressive silence as the oath was slowly repeated by the new official, standing with upraised hand.

Vice President Marshall had now been formally installed as the presiding officer of the senate. This much accomplished, the senate of the 62d congress adjourned sine die, to reorganize immediately as the new senate of the 63d congress, with its new presiding officer directing its affairs. A prayer by the chaplain of the senate was the first formal action of the newly organized senate. With this solemn function over, Vice President Marshall delivered his inaugural address.

It remained only to complete the organization of the new senate by administering the oath to senators re-elected or newly elected to the body.

The returning democratic senators to take the oath were: Bankhead of Alabama; Bacon of Georgia; Simmons of North Carolina; Owen of Oklahoma; Tillman of South Carolina; Sheppard of Texas; and Martin of Virginia.

The re-elected republicans were: Borah of Idaho; Kenyon of Iowa; Nelson of Minnesota; and Warren of Wyoming.

The new democratic members of the body were John T. Robinson of Arkansas; John F. Shafroth of Colorado; William Saulsbury of Delaware; William H. Thompson of Kansas; Ollie M. James of Kentucky; Joseph E. Ransdell of Louisiana; Jan K. Vardiman of Mississippi; Thomas J. Walsh of Montana; William Hughes of New Jersey; Harry Lane of Oregon; and John K. Shields of Tennessee.

The new republicans were: Edwin C. Burleigh of Maine; John W. Weeks of Massachusetts; George W.
