LOOT OF BANDIT SOUGHT BY TRIO

STRANGERS SEEK GOLD BURIED BY "BLACK JACK" MOSIER YEARS AGO

BELLEVUE, Mich., March 17.—This little country town is "all worked up" over the mysterious search for the loot of "Black Jack" Mosier, who with three companions, robbed the State treasurer before the civil war and hid $15,000 in gold in a swamp which is now within the corporate limits of Bellevue.

Several times within the last few weeks three strangers have visited Bellevue and put up at the little village hotel, making trips at night to the edge of the town. Curious villagers on investigating found that two of the men always went to the Grohs swamp, near the river, on the Charles Dolph farm, where they dug up stumps. This was reported to an officer and he went to the strangers and asked for an explanation. They said they were digging for "black jack," a mineral found in the swamps.

The visit of the men and their strange occupation recalls former attempts, equally mysterious, to find the loot of "Black Jack" Mosier. According to the old story, four men robbed the treasurer's office, carrying away $15,000 in gold and burying it along the shore of the river. Three of the men were arrested and imprisoned. The one who escaped had a map of the supposed burial place of the treasure. He went west and never returned for the money, but on his death bed gave the map to his son, with full instructions as to how to find the cache.

It is thought by the villagers that the mysterious leader of the searching party is the son of Mosier, come to recover the spoils of the half-forgotten robbery. He has obtained permission from the owner of the farm to "pull up the stumps" in the swamp.

FOR THE REWARDS OF MINING LOOK TO THE MANY MEN WHO STICK TO IT

The business of mining, while it has every advantage inherent in all other lines of effort, has also some few that are peculiarly its own. Looking at the industry from the standpoint of purely systematic commercialism and disregarding the element of speculation (the factor which makes mining attractive to the majority of the human race) it can be truthfully and consistently said that no man who enters the field and persistently—doggedly—follows the occupation fails to, ultimately, win its rewards.

The Success Microbe is an elusive little beast! He has a way of alighting in the most unexpected places and at startling unforeseen times. Again, like the Irishman's flea, waxy times "Ye put yer hand ahn 'im an' he ain't there!"—but none the less, the man who goes into mining—and stays there—eventually makes money and not infrequently piles up a handsome fortune. Were it possible to get back into the lives of practically every one of the great—and lesser—mining moguls of today, stories of struggles with poverty, privation and hardship utterly incompatible with the present affluence of these same men would be forthcoming.

Senator W. A. Clark, for instance gives an intensely interesting account of what happened to him before his Butte holdings started him on the road to great wealth and the United Verde followed this up with its recorded profits of a "million a month." Denver holds a multitude of men whose individual incomes from the ore business and its allied industries range all the way from "fairly comfortable" to "six figures."

A. D. Parker, for example, who is just now in the lime light owing to wealth recently acquired and still accumulated, is reputed to have "grub staked" his prospector colleague for twenty long years before they finally "struck it" in the Florence mine. John Campion is another multi-millionaire who knows the feel of a pick handle. A. E. Reynolds could make you sit and listen for hours at a time—if he would—and every other mining man who has long since "quit worrying about the cats" could recount facts concerning himself which would surely surprise those whose acquaintance with him is of comparative recent origin.

The host of men who, while not in the plutocrat class, draw substantial revenues from the mines is far larger than is generally known or believed, but every single one of them owes his success to his ability to stick. One of the advantages referred to as being peculiarly characteristic of mining is the fact that there is no commodity that runs into money so fast as reasonably good ore nor is there any other product not directly influenced by the cost of its production. A manufacturer, to double his output, must at once provide a larger factory, increase his selling costs and all his other expenses; a merchant, to do a larger business has to immediately tie up a much larger capital in stock and multiply his expenses all along the line; a farmer, to handle a greater acreage, must acquire more land, more equipment, more help—but it costs no more to mine and market ore worth a hundred dollars a ton than it does to produce an equal quantity worth ten dollars a ton. In all other lines of endeavor in which men labor long and continuously, profits accumulate gradually but your mine operator usually works longer and harder than any of them, very frequently without any financial reward at all, until finally he opens up a body of ore that in a few months enables him to recoup the outlay of years and thereafter continues indefinitely to earn money for him.

NOTICE TO PARTNERS.

William Pierce, your heirs, executors and assigns. You are hereby notified that the undersigned have expended during the years 1912 and 1913 the annual amount of money, in labor and improvements necessary to comply with the annual assessment law upon the Dividend, Dividend No. 1, Dividend No. 2 and Dividend No. 3 quartz mining claims situated in the Ellendale Mining District, Nye County, Nevada. Said expenditures were made for the purpose of holding possessory right and title to said mining claims under the provisions of Section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. If you fail to contribute your proportion of such expenditure as a co-owner in and to the above-mentioned mining claims, your proportion being in the sum of an aggregate $177.77 for the said two years, your interest in said the undersigned, who have made the expenditures and improvements as above-mentioned, pursuant to the provisions of said statutes. CHARLES CLARK, GEORGE CLARK. Date of first publication, January 5, 1914.

This is, of course, only one phase of mining. Conducted as it now is—"As a business, not as an adventure"—the regular, steady income from large deposits of low grade ores is constantly in line for great and sudden increase by reason of the mine workings opening enriched zones which occur at intervals in practically all mineral veins. From the nature of the business its big rewards are erratic but the factor of "luck" is credited with a good deal more influence than it deserves. As a level headed, hard bitten miner friend once expressed it, "They call me lucky, but I ain't any such thing; I know how—and I stick to it."—Denver Mining Record.

MINING IS SAFER THAN FARMING

DEAN OF COLUMBIA SCHOOL OF MINES ADVANCES A STRONG ARGUMENT

"I consider mining enterprises, with the assistance and advice of the right mining engineers and experts, safer from a business standpoint than farming and industrial enterprises. The ore from which the results are obtained is already in the ground and it is only a question of time and the method of extracting same and producing the metal therefrom." These statements were made to graduates of the Columbia School of Mines by Adolph Lewinsohn, one of the most successful operators of mining properties in the country.

In a recent interview published in the New York Times Annalist, Mr. Lewinsohn has the following to say regarding the industry of this country: "In the business of mining success depends largely upon the ability of the engineer or expert to correctly determine the grade and approximate quantity of ore that is in a given space in the mine and the metallurgical treatment which will give the most satisfactory results. A farmer may have all the necessary knowledge and ability and yet may not be able to obtain good results under certain adverse conditions as above mentioned. The success of industrial enterprises depends greatly on the ability to procure the raw material from those who produce it and to manufacture it into the finished article at a price which will leave a profit. The raw material in a mine is supplied by nature. It does not have to grow as crops do, but is there ready to be taken out at any time, and the results depend greatly on the reliability of the mining engineer or expert and his ability to correctly determine the quantity that can be extracted and at what cost. The market price of the metal may vary, but well-trained, experienced men can form a fair judgment as to this. As a general rule a mining enterprise that is able to produce the metal at not higher than the average cost of production should be able to compete with the other producers and be considered as good enough to enter the field of competition."

SAN DIEGO WILL HAVE OUTLET TO THE EAST

SOUTHERN PACIFIC MUST BUILD SAN DIEGO ROAD FOR SPRECKELS

SAN FRANCISCO, March 17.—A momentous financial decision has been rendered by United States District Judge Dietrick of Idaho, in which John D. Spreckels and his brother, Adolph B. Spreckels of San Diego and San Francisco, have won a substantial victory over the Southern Pacific Railway Company.

As a result of the opinion handed down by the jurist after more than a year's deliberation, the Southern Pacific will be forced to continue the construction of the San Diego and Arizona railway, one of the subsidiary and dependent lines fathered by the late E. H. Harriman. This line is projected to Yuma, Ariz. The amount of money involved is something over $3,000,000, which was to have been the purchase price of the railroad had John D. and Adolph Spreckels decided to purchase it from the Southern Pacific Company.
