MAJORITY OF FIRES MAY BE TRACED TO LIGHTNING

DEEPLY ROOTED TREES HAVE A GREATER ATTRACTION FOR ELECTRICITY.

Exhaustive inquiry has established the fact that lightning ranks next to railroads as a source of forest fires. Forest officers say that the increasing care with fire on the part of the railroads and the public generally tends to make lightning the largest single contributing cause.

This statement represents a change of view from that held less than a decade ago in this country, when forest journals gravely argued whether lightning caused forest fires, though it was known that trees were the objects most often struck. Trees are said to be often struck simply because they are so numerous, and extending upward they shorten the distance between the ground and the clouds; further, their branches in the air and roots well into the earth invite electrical discharges.

While certain trees are said to invite lightning, and others to be immune from stroke, it seems to be a fact that any kind of tree will be struck, and the most numerous tree species in any locality is the one most likely to suffer.

Other things being equal, lightning seeks the tallest tree, or an isolated tree, or one on high ground. A deep-rooted tree is a better conductor than a shallow-rooted one, and a tree full of sap, or wet with rain, is of course a better conductor than a dry one.

Lightning sets fires by igniting the tree itself, particularly when it is dead, or partly decayed and punky, or by igniting the dry humus or duff at its base. The forest soil, when dried out, ignites readily, because it is made of partly decayed twigs and leaves, and it can hold a smoldering fire for a considerable period. It is probable that most of the lightning-set fires start in the duff.

In the mountains of southern California, Arizona, and New Mexico there are likely to be each year a number of electrical disturbances known as "dry thunder storms." They come at the end of the long dry season, and being unaccompanied by rain are very likely to start many serious fires. For this reason the forest service has to keep up its maximum fire fighting strength in those regions until the rains are fully established. In the plans and organization for fire fighting the service aims particularly to catch these unpreventable lightning-set fires at the time they start.

MANAGIN'

Red McGhee says:

Just how McGraw and Mack get by has always puzzled ol' man Frye. Frye th' racks the balls at Hank's. Ol' Frye tries hard, but he can't see how those guys hold their jobs while he just watches last ball banks. In any pool room you c'n name you'll find a guy who thinks the same as this ol' geezer Frye. 300's their postmortem clip, they're always ready with the tip on how they lost and why.

Red McGhee

"They oughta hunt, not kill the ball," says Frye. "An' Jinks can't pitch at all. They oughta let him go. An' yesterday with two men on, they oughta derricked Southpaw John an' given Jake a show." He rambles on for hours like that on who c'n pitch an' who c'n bat an' how t' bring runs home. No manager is worth a cap; instead o' brains each one has sap t' fill his iv'ry dome.

Frye doesn't hesitate to brag that he'd step out an' win a flag an' do it in a walk, if some team owner'd let him try. His name and fame'd never die—t' hear the ol' boy talk. But here's a secret—listen, fans. I've known him since he wore short pants an' went t' bed at dark. In all those yzars that braggin' jay has never seen two ball teams play in any big league park.

BUTLER THEATER.

At the Butler tomorrow a special release feature in three parts will be shown. This is the first number of "The Perils of Pauline," the most talked-of motion picture ever taken.

As played by the great Pathe players in the Pathe studio in Jersey City it is a film full of action, in tense interest, wonderful situations, daring thrills, wonderful scenic effects—in fact, "The Perils of Pauline" would be a wonderful success without the added importance of the publicity and the $25,000 in prizes which are offered. Pauline has an awful struggle between love and ambition. Owen, a very remarkable villain, invents the most ingenious plans to secure Pauline's fortune. Harry Marvin certainly has his work cut out for him felling these plans. The action of the story includes flying machine accidents, thrilling rescues, fires at sea, train wrecks, automobile accidents. In fact, everything that can be introduced as a "thrill." The players who take part in this feature are Pearl White, who plays the part of Pauline (Miss White's gowns are by Lady Duff-Gordon, the famous "Lucile"); Paul Panzer as Raymond Owen, a very remarkable villain, and Crane Wilbur, an extremely attractive lover. The admission will be 10c.—Adv. A30.

CO-OPERATION IS SAFEGUARD FOR PUBLIC HEALTH

Health officials are constantly employing every reasonable and practical means to exterminate infectious diseases, but to be successful in this there must be more extended co-operation on the part of the public, particularly in the home by the employment of such modern methods of sanitary sewage disposal as are available. Generally there is a greatly increased number of cases of measles, diphtheria and scarlet fever occurring soon after the beginning of the school year. This was formerly believed to be due to the transmission of these diseases through the medium of the clothing of well children in whose homes infectious diseases had occurred. Today we know that this is not the true explanation, for infection is only rarely transmitted by clothing, baggage, etc., but rather by contact with those who are infected.

These infections in cases of school children are brought home, in many instances, to the unsanitary conditions prevailing in and along streets traversed by the children on their way to and from school, and forms another manner of infection by contact.

It may be truthfully said that in so far as the protection of public health is concerned, the home that is not provided with modern disposal conveniences, represents the lowest ebb of sanitation and the enforced preventive measures as applied to vaults and cess-pools have as a rule little or no practical value.

Co-operation on the part of the public in the all important matter of sewage disposal is not only certain to diminish the number of infectious diseases with a corresponding lessening of mortality, but will extend most important and valuable aid in exterminating this constant menace to health and life.

History relates that in the 14th century plague appeared in Western Europe and remained constantly active for a number of years. It is estimated that during this period over 10,000,000 persons, or about one-fourth of the entire population, were destroyed. The inhabitants were helpless to prevent this devastation, because modern methods of sewage disposal were then unheard of and the known sanitary measures were of but little value or worthless.
