THE DEATH OF KITCHENER

TROUBLES never come singly and the British Empire is now experiencing an acute agony over the trials showered on it during the last three days, sufficient to try more heroic souls than the sons of Britannia. The battle off Jutland may have been even honors although the first admissions from the British admiralty confirmed every asseveration of the Germans. Later developments led to a modification of sentiment in which the thought was expressed that the battle was real triumph for the ships carrying the Union Jack. Scarcely had the country emerged from the gloom of this disaster than it is confronted with the loss of its commander-in-chief and his entire staff. General Kitchener, the brains of the British war department, closed his life in the harness he loved so well. He died accosted in the uniform of his country for which he gave his entire life and as the waves closed over his remains they sang a mournful dirge that will find echo in the hearts of his countrymen. The loss is a calamity. The place of General Kitchener will be filled, for life is mutable and, after the first shock, the world will go on in its orbit as it has done for thousands of years regardless of the coming and going of the human atoms on the surface.

The effect will be problematical. Another man may do infinitely better. Some genius may rise up to give his country the benefit of a better equipped mind and develop more original powers of concentration than what was possessed by the Sirdar of Egypt. Other able generals and distinguished statesmen have come and gone in the British Empire without dimming the luster of her military prestige and the present loss may have its compensation in the birth of an unknown leader who will give his people a more potent administration. The stage is set. The men are at the front. Munitions in abundance have been provided and the nation is equipped as it never was before to carry out the orders of the Crown.

The greatest effort of General Kitchener was in providing England with an army of 5,000,000 men fit for battle in the short period of two years. He found a dearth of raw material and an indifference of public opinion that would have carried dismay to a weaker heart and the accomplishment of this mobilization will stand as the greatest achievement of his life overshadowing the glories of the Nile and the subjugation of South Africa.

Another man may rise in his place and another policy may give Great Britain the force which always has been the corollary of her armies and which seems to have been lacking in this war of all wars. The tragedy which deprives the nation of her leading warrior may bring the immobile British populace to a sense of the seriousness of the situation confronting her and stimulate a loyalty and inspire an action that will eventually invite the coming of peace.

FAVORITISM OF THE LAW

WHEN the commissioners of Nye county undertook to regulate the fashions for dogs to the extent that each was compelled to wear a bonnet over his nose and jaws it was commonly supposed that good results would accrue. Obviously the law was designed to prevent the extension of rabies which raged with virulence in the northern sheep country. Therefore it was essential that dogs in the rural districts should receive special attention. The contrary was the case. The ordinance was promulgated in Tonopah and a dog slayer appointed to exterminate every domestic pet that succeeded in escaping outdoors without the thraldom of a mask. The law was brutally executed. So were the dogs. A ruthless executioner paraded the streets armed with a rifle and authority from the county to torture and slay every dog found prowling around without a muzzle. That the instructions were carried out to the bitter extreme goes without saying. The officer dispatched the offenders without regard to the feelings of owners or the value of pets. In doing this he was strictly within his orders which came from the commissioners. The cost of the warfare was charged against the town in spite of the presence of half a dozen officers already on the payroll who could have taken care of the business and attended to it with more semblance of mercy than was manifested by the special appointee.

The county commissioners must have thought there was danger of meeting a rabid coyote or a horde of froth flaked coyotes far from their pastures on the range and therefore there was some necessity for exercising extreme cruelty in diminishing the canine population of Tonopah. It is safe to say that hundreds of residents of this town never saw a coyote outside of a menagerie and the possibility of meeting one running amuck on Main street was an alternative that almost bordered on the ridiculous. Nevertheless the law against unmuzzled dogs was enforced to a barbarous extent in Tonopah while in the surrounding country, where coyotes are found in their native lair, nothing was said or done incur the displeasure of ranchers or stockmen. Travelers who have had occasion to cross the country between Tonopah and Ely say the sight of a muzzled dog is unknown although curs of every shade and degree abound. If the law is designed to prevent infection then it should be enforced where the peril is actual and not alone in Tonopah where the inoculation of minor brutes is as rare as a rainy day on the desert.

The commissioners should either waive the order in Tonopah or enforce it generally. There is no right to discriminate. If the public health is endangered or herds and flocks are placed in jeopardy by the existence of rabies the war of extermination should be carried out with the utmost rigor by enforcing the muzzle law outside towns and cities.

FOOLING THE PEOPLE AGAIN

WITH the hope of stealing the thunder of the Republicans in the coming campaign Democrats in Washington are hewing into form three tariff planks to be slipped into the St. Louis platform: (1) A plank favoring a tariff commission; (2) One favoring protection for the dyestuffs industry; (3) One favoring protection of American industries against foreign dumping and providing heavy penalties for foreign concerns engaged in unfair competition in the United States.

The Republicans will be able to show conclusively that the insertion of these planks in the St. Louis platform is for political purposes only, by pointing to the record of the Democrats on each of them.

Not until very recently did Woodrow Wilson change his mind on the subject and come out in favor of a tariff commission. He declared that he had changed his mind because conditions had changed, but the conditions to which he referred were political, not commercial, and he hoped to secure the adherence of quite a number of business men who favored a tariff commission. Prior to this expedient change of mind he was categorically against a tariff commission; he declared the "cost of production as a basis for tariff legislation does not exist as a scientific, demonstration datum fact;" a Democratic majority in the house killed the tariff board authorized under the Republican tariff law; and when the Democratic tariff law was being framed a Republican amendment providing for a tariff commission was turned down by the Democrats unanimously.

TUSCARORA MILL EXPECTED AT TUSCARORA THIS WEEK

Machinery for a 100-stamp mill is on the road and should be here by the end of the week and will be taken to Tuscarora at once. The plans of the new mill call for its erection in units, so that as soon as one unit is in successful operation, another may be started.—Elko Free Press.

MISS DeETT CAMERON, who resided in Tonopah fourteen years ago, was an arrival on this morning's train from Oakland and will be the guest of Mrs. C. E. Shaughnessy for the next month.
