PUBLIC SPEAKING AND "PUNCH"

THE opponents of Mr. Hughes declare that his speeches in the west have lacked "punch"; that he has created no wild enthusiasm anywhere. It is admitted that the crowds have been large, the most capacious halls being filled to capacity; and no mention has been made of any sign of impatience with the speaker. His audiences have not thinned out after a short experience of him, but have remained and given attention to the end.

The comparison, of course, is with effects produced by Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Bryan when they are stumping. They are whoopers up of the first quality. Crowds rise to them as under a spell. The only by his animation and feverish volubility, and the other by his action and smooth phrasemaking, play upon an audience, to use a familiar figure, as a musician upon his instrument.

Mr. Hughes possesses no such faculty. In the accepted sense, he is not an orator, and nothing whatever of an actor. But he is a speaker of very great force; and the fact that his audiences stay until he concludes is evidence that he establishes a certain power over them which may be more valuable than mere witchery of phrase and gesture.

It may be well to recall the fact that the famous Youngstown speech lacked "punch," as the word is used. Mr. Hughes on that occasion did not throw his hearers into "convulsions." The address with which he opened the Taft campaign in 1908, very far from being showy or rousing, was a carefully expressed and thoroughly reasonable deliverance, and was soberly received by those present. Its value to them, and to all everywhere who read it the next day in the newspapers, was in the facts presented and their orderly arrangement. In that way it carried far and made so deep an impression the effect continued throughout the campaign.

Declamation has its uses and its power. Some audiences respond to nothing else. Some communities have been "brought up" on it. A good declaimer, who has fashioned himself on some famous model and gives a fair imitation of "the real article," works wonder there.

As a rule, however, even in the most stirring campaigns, it is the man of thought rather than the man of platform trick who performs the best services. Those who listen carry away whatever of value they hear, and meditate about it before going to the polls to vote. A thought remains; a trick is soon forgotten.

WILSON AND THE EMBARGO

MR. ROOSEVELT gives a graphic account of how Mr. Wilson has continually changed his mind on the subject of permitting arms and ammunition to go into Mexico. In August, 1913, Mr. Wilson announced in his message to Congress that he would not permit arms to go in and established an embargo. On February 2, 1914, he changed his mind and raised the embargo. A couple of hundred American soldiers, sailors and civilians were killed or wounded during the next two months. On April 23, Mr. Wilson changed his mind again and restored the embargo, but on May 15 he changed his mind again and the embargo was lifted, so far as shipments to Tampico and other Mexican ports were concerned. On September 9 the embargo was lifted everywhere. On October 29, 1915, when all the factions had been amply supplied, Mr. Wilson changed his mind again and restored the embargo. Mr. Roosevelt continues: "On October 29, last, therefore, Mr. Wilson specifically permitted arms to be sent to the same Carranza who, in the month of September, thirty days previous, on four specific occasions, invaded American territory and butchered American citizens, mutilating them before or after death. On the date when this embargo was thus raised, the names of 276 Americans who had been murdered had been officially placed on file. How many others had been murdered cannot at present be told."

AFTER THE WAR

THERE has been a great deal of talk about conditions after the war. The Republicans believe there will come an era of the fiercest industrial competition and that unless the tariff law is amended the industries of the United States will suffer disaster. The Democrats, however, profess to believe that an era of prosperity will follow the end of the war, and they actually insist that the present prosperity is permanent. Facts and figures, however, speak louder than academic argument and here are the facts and figures: When the European war broke out 55 per cent of the plant of the Carnegie Steel company was idle, and there was much distress among its employes. Recently 100 per cent of its plant was running full time and its employes are prosperous. But—and it is a big but—55 per cent of its recent output consists of ammunition, or some form of steel designed for use in making ammunition. The instant the war stops that 55 per cent of the plant will again be idle, and so will the employes who are operating it.

LINEN INDUSTRY MAY BE ESTABLISHED ON PERMANENT BASIS IN THIS COUNTRY

(By Associated Press.) WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—The high prices of linen and of the flax fiber from which linen is made has centered attention on the necessity of establishing a real linen industry in this country, the greatest consumer of linen in the world. There seem to be two big problems which must be solved before success is assured. One is to find some artificial method of preparing the flax straw for the spinner, thus relieving the flax grower of this task, and the other is to convince the American public that American-made linen is as good as any other. There are a number of minor problems, and they are all discussed in a report by W. A. Graham Clark just published by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce.

The only country in which the production of flax fiber has increased consistently in recent years is Russia, the report states. In the British Isles and in France the production has decreased in spite of all efforts to keep the industry growing, and in Austria-Hungary, Belgium and the Netherlands the industry has not been able to hold its own. The American production has never been of importance. Thanks to liberal government aid and to cheap labor the Russians had gradually been getting a monopoly of the business up to the time the war broke out.

In the United States flax has been raised almost entirely for the seed, which is used to make the well-known linseed oil so necessary for the production of good paints and varnishes. Of some 3,000,000 acres of flax raised in this country in 1915, the Department of Agriculture estimates that only 2000 acres were devoted to flax for fiber.

ARCTIC RELIEF BOAT BRINGS GOOD NEWS

(By Associated Press.) BATTLE HARBOR, Sept. 8.—The Greenfell mission schooner George B. Cloett, which went to the relief of the Donald H. McMillan Arctic expedition in July, 1915, has returned here. Only Capt. H. C. Pickles and the crew are aboard. McMillan, Dr. E. O. Hovey, who led the relief expedition, and the other scientists of the party having elected to remain for awhile in the northern part of Greenland.

The McMillan party were joined by Knud Rasmussen, the Danish explorer who had been engaged in that region in mapping out the coast, and it is understood that they will return by way of Denmark.
