MAKING WAR AT HOME.

THE presidential policy of declaring a state of war and then sitting placidly at home waiting for the enemy to come along to invite battle is ridiculed by the Chicago Tribune in a keenly satirical editorial which pillories the new policy born of the "keeping us out of war" system of the administration. The article reads in part as follows:

"The regular army and the national guard will be recruited to greater strength and put in form for home defense. With such efforts we are to rest and abide by the outcome, as it may be shaped for or against us by the efforts of allies with whom we are to have no alliance and no definitely stated terms of contract.

"There must be Americans who will observe this plan with dismay and humiliation. No man wants to go to France and fight—at least, no home loving American citizen—but it will be a sad and long lived national humiliation if we decide that, being, even as Canada, at war with Germany, we shall merely make cartridges and have the Canadians shoot them.

"Germany is uninterested in the decision of the United States. Why? Because Germany knows we have nothing to contribute to the man power of her enemies. The Germans wanted to keep Roumania out of the war. They do not care whether we enter or not. They perceive or sense the condition of our morale and inevitable error of our decisions.

"We, making an atrocious blunder and committing ourselves to a diplomatic disaster, confirm the German idea by proclaiming that we shall not put an army against the German forces.

"We say that we may go to war but that we shall not fight. There is no intent to underestimate what may be done to aid the allies with materials. We may indeed save them by doing so, but we are making only a half effort, by so doing in a cause which embraces our honor and security.

"A man's war will be waged north of the great lakes and a ladies' war south of it. A nation of nine millions will furnish men, and a nation of one hundred millions will give them guns and hard-tack. The wounded Canadians coming home will look with contempt upon the nation to the south in front of whose security the Canadian khaki had stood in danger. Canadians fight with bayonets. Shall Americans fight with bazars? Canadians will wear the red badge of courage. Shall Americans put on the yellow night cap? We go to war but we do not fight it. We proclaim that we do not intend to fight it. We strengthen the enemy's morale instead of weakening it. We expose ourselves to danger and rely upon our Canadian neighbors to do our part in warding it off. We play a feminine part in masculine work, a shielded part in dangerous work.

"We cannot do this and be a respected nation after the war. We shall be more nearly a vassal nation than will please the pride of any American. We shall confess that we have been protected by Canadian bayonets and British warships or, if they fail, we shall pay tribute to Germany. If present plans go through the American army will be the Woman's Home Companion."

SUFFRAGISTS TO THE FRONT.

THE suffragists and their sisters who seek the ballot and who have been maintaining a guard around the White House day and night for the purpose of impressing on President Wilson, whom they elected, the necessity of enacting the Susan B. Anthony amendment, have surrendered to a sense of justice and the value of doing something for their country instead of playing at a mimic war. The ladies have had a day of reason and now are preparing to shape their course after a manner that will do more to give suffrage than all the silent protests they might make from now to doomsday. They have taken to themselves the duty of preparing for the serious side of war and conducting themselves accordingly. In face of the great peril confronting the nation they are going to use their organization for educating their sisters in the feminine share of war. They are not enlisting in the navy or tendering their services to the army, but they are going about this war in a sensible, womanly way that shows they are endowed with all the womanly qualities that endear the names of sister, mother, wife and sweetheart to the affections of the American people. They are getting business in a practical way that will bear excellent fruit. They are going to educate the masses to lessons of thrift and economy by setting the example themselves. The national association has undertaken to establish schools to tutor the people in patriotism and to safeguard their sisters, who may be left unprotected when the call comes for the men of the family to shoulder guns and repair to the training camps designed to fit them for the stern duties of army life. The suffragists are organizing to look after the helpless ones at home so that they will not suffer through the loss of their natural breadwinners. Then they are going into the homes and households to inculcate lessons of economy with the object of proving that much good may be accomplished by conserving the resources which a bountiful Providence has placed at our doors. The American people are notoriously wasteful. They have not had the same incentive to thrift that has been enforced in more congested countries and the first lesson will be to save and make the most of what we have and discourage reckless and extravagant living. In the agricultural districts these women will devote their time and knowledge to impressing the value of a more intense cultivation and by so doing compensate for the loss of the farm class drawn to the army. There is nothing strikingly new about this order of affairs, for it is one that has been driven home to the families of those who have been forced to fight for their country on the various battle fronts in Europe. There is nothing like taking time by the forelock. England didn't do it, but her people are doing it now. Germany has been doing it from the very beginning of the war and yet her people are suffering the pangs of hunger. This is the economic side of war. On the other hand the suffragists are taking up Red Cross work with a zeal that means establishing schools for nurses and making emergency supplies for the men at the front. If war has to come, the American woman will do her share in sustaining national resourcefulness and she will do it better than her less fortunate sisters closer to the field of Mars.

NEVADA TRUNK LINE PROJECT TO OREGON

(By Associated Press.)

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Mar. 31.—A vast undeveloped territory, comprising more than 28,000 square miles, of which 11,000,000 acres are ready for dry and irrigated farming, and on which it is asserted fifty billion feet of white pine is ready for the woodman's axe and the world's market, would be opened up for settlement with the completion of a railroad building program in southern and southeastern Oregon, now being pushed by Robert E. Strahorn, a railroad builder of Spokane, Washington.

About $500,000 of the $7,000,000 needed to connect the proposed circuit with the terminals of the five existing railroads had been secured and actual construction would start in about six months, according to Mr. Strahorn's announcement here. The project is to build from Bend, Oregon, to the Southern Pacific at Klamath Falls; to the Oregon Short Line at Crane, and to the Nevada, California & Oregon line at Lakeview, all in Oregon. Approximately 400 miles of line are needed to complete the circuit. If necessary funds are available, construction work from Klamath Falls to a point 40 miles northward will be completed this year, the announcement says.

In a statement Strahorn said he was in no way affiliated with the Western Pacific, Southern Pacific or Hill system; that the proposed building scheme was entirely independent of outside interests and that the capital was to be raised by sale of bonds of cities interested, subscriptions and the bonding of the road. Rights of way and terminals, he said, had been largely donated. First estimates of $6,000,000 for the building program is a million dollars short of the amount required, Strahorn said, because of the great increase in the price of steel rails and other building materials. The cost of the line per mile, he said, would average about $15,000.

CITIZENS OF HOPE GREAT OPTIMISTS

FOUNDED DURING KLONDIKE BOOM AND STILL KEEPS ON STRUGGLING

(By Associated Press.)

SEWARD, Alaska, Mar. 31.—For the second time in the 18 years of its existence, the village of Hope, where citizens say they endeavor to live up to its name, was visited by a missionary preacher recently. Hope is a mining camp on the northern edge of Kenai peninsula 65 miles by trail from Seward, the terminal of the new United States railroad.

Harry C. Munro, missionary pastor who has just returned from Hope, where he held four services, declares that the village is populated by the most enthusiastic and optimistic people under the American flag.

"There are 71 persons in Hope, including 18 children, but not counting 11 who are out in the states on business," said Mr. Munro. All those to whom I talked declared Hope to be the best place they had ever lived and not one had plans of moving to any other locality, regardless of the boom in towns nearer the government railroad.

"In spite of the fact that there is no church there, and the only other minister to visit them was a missionary from the Presbyterian board some three years ago, every family was supplied with a Bible and all expressed great interest in establishing a Sunday school.

"The new Sunday school probably is one of the most broad in regard to creed in the United States, as it includes children whose parents, prior to coming to Hope, were affiliated with Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, Congregationalist, Roman Catholic, Greek Catholic and Episcopal churches."

Hope is a gold mining camp, founded by a stampede in 1896, the year before the discovery of gold on the Klondike. At one time it boasted a population of 2000. Most of the present population have been there for ten years or more. Agricultural development of the available land about the village has progressed to a great degree in recent years.

There is gold on all the creeks, in spite of the fact that all of the "big pay" was taken out in the years following the first stampede and it is apparent that development work on quartz ledges from which the placer deposits originated, may again make it a center of activity.

SHIPPING FAMINE GROWING SERIOUS

(By Associated Press.)

LONDON, Mar. 31.—Measures are contemplated by the controller of shipping for dealing with the systematic employment of liners in various trades, says the Times. The plan, which will commence with vessels employed in the Australian and New Zealand trades, provides that all vessels would be requisitioned at Blue Book rates. Owners would carry on their business as before. All profits above those allowed by Blue Book rates would go to the government. All competition would be eliminated and the plan would extend to other trades as soon as possible.

This proposal is said to meet with approval of shipowners.

The chamber of shipping, however, has adopted a resolution, presented by Lord Inchape, asserting that any proposals for state ownership of the mercantile marine are contrary to the national interest, and that it is only under the free play of individual enterprise that British shipping can maintain its "unrivaled position."

HELPING HUMAN BURROS OF CHINA

(By Associated Press.)

PEKING, Mar. 31.—Madam Wu Ting Fang, wife of the minister of foreign affairs, assisted by a number of American, English and Chinese women, is raising a fund to better the condition of jinrikisha men in Peking. The jinrikisha is practically the only means of transportation in Peking, which has a population of over 1,000,000 persons. More than 5000 jinrikisha men ply the streets constantly. Heretofore no shelters have been provided for these men and the death rate among them has been very high, especially in cold weather. The relief society proposes to erect shelter in which stoves will be placed in winter and tea will be served throughout the year.

COCAINE HABIT HAS NOT SEIZED ENGLAND

(By Associated Press.) LONDON, Mar. 31.—London is not in the grip of the cocaine habit. So says a report of the cocaine committee, which has completed an investigation into what alarmists said was a growing curse of the people. "The habit is practically confined to a small section of the dominion troops and to an almost negligible number of broken down medical men," the report added.
