CENTRALIZED CONTROL OF WAR.

AMERICA is acting as banker for our allies and they look to her for food, ammunition and raw materials. Co-operation in finance is complete and President Wilson is dictator of the dollars. There is no similar co-operation in the direction of military operations at a time when American troops are expected to turn the tide. In money and other material resources Germany is outclassed, but the kaiser and his general staff direct the military operations of the Teutonic allies and secure perfect co-ordination of effort in the field, says the New York Commercial.

When Austria-Hungary was threatened by the first Jugo-Slav agitation Germany assisted her in crushing Serbia and rounding out Mitteleuropa by establishing communications with Bulgaria and Turkey. When the Rumanians invaded Transylvania Germany overran their country. When Russia invaded Galicia for the second time Germany struck at Riga and pushed the Russians back beyond the Dina. All these blows were delivered at the right moment.

Through lack of centralized control our allies let Serbia perish, Russia failed to go to the rescue of Rumania and Italy claims to have lost the fruits of eighteen months of victory in six days for lack of food, ammunition and other supplies.

It is easy to blame Great Britain and France, but the fault lies elsewhere. Russia fell into political chaos and her armies were betrayed by some of their leaders and by German sympathizers and agents in court circles. No outside help could have saved her under such conditions and she alone could have helped Rumania. Only by supreme skill has General Maude been able to survive the failure of Russia to protect his right flank in Mesopotamia.

Italy held back when she might have saved Serbia, because she did not wish to see a Slav power hold any part of the Adriatic sea coast. She also opposed the claims of Greece in Macedonia. Italy acted as if she wished to fight her own battles and secure her own share of the spoils of war without consulting her allies. She had plenty of troops and arms and seemed able to hold her own.

In France and Belgium our allies have co-operated in a proper way and have deprived Germany of the initiative. It is slow work, but Germany is losing ground, men and morale on the western front. Had Russia done her part this year Germany would not have been able to detach half a million men from the eastern front to help her ally drive the Italians back into the Venetian plain. The kaiser can send Turkish and Bulgarian troops wherever he wishes. He is in supreme control, while his foes do not strike in unison when they have a chance.

At the Paris conference the United States should take the lead in an effort to secure co-ordination of the forces of all the nations at war with Germany. It may not be possible to improve the situation on the western front, where American troops are already in action, but the weakness on other European fronts must be corrected and America has a right to some voice in the military council when our dollars are financing so much of the cost of war. We shall do all that is possible to help Italy and Russia, but our representatives in Paris must strive to secure harmonious co-operation on the part of all our allies. They have not lost the war, but they have twice or three lost the chance to end it by beating Germany to her knees in one concerted drive on all fronts.

TAX ON CHANGING MIND.

ONE of the curiosities of the new revenue bill is the tax which one incurs for changing his mind. The bill lays a tax upon railroad, parlor car and sleeping car fares; and, by regulation of the treasury department, recently issued, if a man who has been lucky enough to reserve a lower and should change his mind about the train he would travel on, he will have to pay another tax for the privilege of exchanging his accommodations. If a tax upon changes of mind had been in vogue in all matters during the past few years the president would have had a considerable bill to pay.

WHY NOT NAME THEM?

SAMUEL G. BLYTHE, writing in the Saturday Evening Post, says with much repetition that there are four first-class men in the cabinet. He neglects to name them, and his readers are all guessing. It is as difficult a problem to solve as that earlier one which perplexed Washington when the war broke out. Two senators were then debating as to who was the weakest man in the cabinet. One said Baker, the other said Daniels, and a colleague was scalded in to decide. "You will have to excuse me," said the third, "I am committed to Redfield."

NO CANDIDATE IN GERMANY.

FORMER SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY SHAW calls attention to the fact that the seventh German war loan, in the same sum as our second, has just been successfully floated without any of the spectacular concomitants which have marked the "drive" for the Liberty Loans. But who can tell what would have taken place in Germany if the minister of finance had happened to be a candidate for the kaiser's place?

What Food Saving Involves

Sign the pledge and enroll as a member of the United States Food Administration, and you will be asked to do these things:

Eat plenty, but wisely, and without waste.

Buy less; cook no more than necessary; serve smaller portions.

Whenever possible use poultry, game and sea foods in place of beef, mutton and pork.

Use potatoes and other vegetables freely.

Save wheat by substituting, in part, corn meal and other cereal flours for wheat flour.

Save butter and lard. Use butter on the table, but substitute vegetable oils for cooking.

Save sugar. Use less candy and sweet drinks and less sugar in tea and coffee.

"This is a duty of necessity, humanity and honor. As a free people we have elected to discharge this duty, not under autocratic decree, but without other restraint than the guidance of individual conscience."

—Herbert Hoover.

Litigation Subject Waugh Kid Talks

(By the Waugh Kid.)

Well, the White Caps vs. Morning Glory injunction proceedings are over and, of course, all of the wise ones are now saying, "I told you so," just as they did at the finish of the world's series. It's too bad that apex suits and world's series cannot endure forever, as us muckers surely gain a lot of information from both—for instance, who'd a knowd that Zlamie was bone-headed enough to try to beat Eddie Collins running from third to home and who'd a knowd the difference between Zanzibar and Pine Nut Limestone?

In the Jim Butler-West End case we learned about the "Hajos" and now the White Caps-Morning Glory case has handed us the "Pipes." What next? Nobody but Blanch Ring can tell. She's playing it this season. This is a pun. Do you catch it?

But, getting down to the subject matter. Who and which side won? That is the burning question. I started to find out by asking some of my friends the evening the decision was rendered.

I was fortunate; that is, I thought I was, in meeting in the lobby of the Mizpah L. A. Gibbons, the Francis Bushman of the Nevada bar. I never knew why they likened Bert Gibbons unto Bushman until I noticed so many ladies in attendance at the hearing. Funny how the ladies, and married ones at that, will trapse around a court room just to squint at a good looking attorney. Personally, I think Jim Timlin, the balliff, and Mr. McCraney both outshine Gibbons in looks.

Knowing that Gibbons was one of the attorneys for the Morning Glory, I was sure he'd give me the correct dope. I was just about to approach him when Mr. ABCDEFGH Currie, E. M., of Manhattan, butted in ahead of me with some question about an Assay Wall, so I turned on my heel and started out, when I met Mr. Caldwell, one of the large stockholders of Glory.

"Hello, Caldwell; who won the case?" I asked.

"We did. Won it hands down. Got everything we asked for."

"Permit me to congratulate you," I replied and made a bee line for a broker's office, where I gave orders to short three thousand Caps and buy five thousand Glory.

"I've just received a buying order for Caps and a selling order for Glory and can fix up your order right now," said the broker with a smile.

"Fine and dandy!" I exclaimed, at the same time writing out a check. After thanking the broker for his quick service, I went home and retired to dream of the Liberty Bonds I'd buy the next afternoon. I was up from the mine and all changed tally and just as soon as the whistle blew I fairly ran down to the broker's office to find out how wealthy I'd become over night.

I could see myself doing the Carnegie Free Library Act, riding in a big Marmon and buying Liberty Bonds galore. But when I reached the broker's office and looked at the quotations—well, why take time to tell you about my feelings, except to say that the thrills and embellishments which played up and down my spinal column would make a Padewski performance sound like a jackhammer?

When I finished the quotations the broker, who had evidently been watching me to see how I'd act, said he wanted to see me in the back room. Of course, you know what the brokers want when they invite you into the back room. When we got behind closed doors the broker said he was sorry—I believe he was, too. I mean until he saw me reach down into the hip pocket of my corduroys and pull out a checkbook. After that he did not seem so sorry. At any rate, I left his office clean.

Just as I was going out of the broker's office I met Judge Somers. "Say, Judge, who won the case?" I asked feverishly, and at the same time began to chew the handle of my dinner pail.

"Why, the White Caps, of course. The other side never had a look in," said the judge with a smile.

"But I was told that the Glory had won."

"Well, you have been misinformed," replied the judge.

"Since looking at that board in there I believe you are right," I answered, and started up the street. As I was going up Bryan avenue I met a pretty school ma'am coming down. Thinking she might have interpreted a correct construction of the decision, I approached and asked her.

"Yes, I teach civil law and the Judge's decision is easy of comprehension," she said with an air of confidence.

"But who won the case?" I asked. "Well, now, I shall explain it thoroughly. The White Caps company won the apex—you understand what an apex is—it's the top part of anything; the uppermost part of a mountain."

"Exactly," I said.

"Now, the Morning Glory," continued the pretty one with a long yellow pencil in her hand, which she used as a pointer, "wanted to drive a tunnel at the base of said mountain to intersect a vertical plane of the apex owned by the White Caps and"

Poor girl! I could see at once that she understood the proposition, so, just to change the subject, I said: "I'd like to visit your class some day."

"Yes, do come up; we like to have visitors. Friday is a good day for visitors, as we always have a review of the week's work, after which games are indulged in."

"Games!" I exclaimed. "Do you play clap-in-and-clap-out and post of fice? If so, I shall come up every Friday." The teacher pouted and said, "You are a real man."

Now, dear reader, we know what an apex is, but does anyone know who won the case?

BAGPIPERS POPULAR.

(By Associated Press.) LONDON, Nov. 7.—It required a European ear to force the bagpipes on the British navy. Four years ago only two British warships had official pipers on board, whereas today it is exceptional to find a warship or a naval establishment without its piper. Very often there is a whole piper band.
