OBSESSED WITH GERMAN IDEAS OF CONQUERING WHOLE WORLD

(Correspondence Associated Press) LONDON, July 2.—Despite their four years of fighting, some of the German prisoners of war still are obsessed by the German idea of conquering the world. That unadulterated Prussianism still exists in the German ranks is the conclusion of one British officer who has interviewed a number of the German prisoners. One of them he describes as "an intelligent university man." The British officer quotes their conversation as follows: "I do not wish to insult you," said the German, "but you English are well-intended fools. We who govern in Germany are not like you. We govern the fools; the fools govern you."

"Guilt," demanded the German: "It was a glory. I claim it for Germany." "That is hardly your official view," "The official view is for the fools." "But you believe in the Prussian purpose behind all this?" asked the British officer. "I do, as in nothing else," replied the German. "The Prussian purpose is God. There is no other. Prussia will render the veil of the temple, but she will destroy to create. Against Prussian might the world as it exists today will fall in ruins, but

Prussia will build a better and more virile world in its place. Strength only will survive. The life of men is naturally a fight. The strongest in force and cunning will live." "It will be going back to the Flood," said the Briton. "Prussia is the Flood." "And when the old world is drowned, virtue and all such weaknesses will go with it?" "The old virtue was womanish," said the prisoner. "The new virtue is strength." "In that blessed future will war reign triumphant? "Life is war—all of life that is healthy. Peace is only striving for mastery with other weapons. That is the law of nature." "The weakest will go under. They are the diseased. The stronger will live; and after that the stronger and stronger, till there is perfect health." "But it may be that Prussia will keep a few slaves?" "Certainly," said the German. "Those who care not to fight that they may rule are in their nature slaves." "I had had enough of it," the officer concluded. "It was nauseating. But the man was genuine in his beliefs and so obsessed by his elementary notion of virility that it was a waste of time to argue with him. His conceptions were quite definite and not a doubt assailed him. The hideous war world of his vision seemed to him a natural and a glorious world."

SYSTEM OF PUTTING RELIEF TROOPS INTO THE FRONT LINE TRENCHES

(Correspondence Associated Press) SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE, June 28.—In the old wars, reinforcing troops "marched in the direction of the firing." Today, when a 200-mile front may be abreast, the sound of the firing is too continuous and too widespread to afford much indication as to where the reinforcements are required. In the ordinary way, reliefs in trenches are carried out according to a carefully arranged time table and on a formal plan. The business of "taking over" a line of trenches from the outgoing battalion has long since been reduced to an exact formula. But when the fighting is in open country and the line only partially dug in, it is more difficult, and great care has to be exercised lest advanced patrols and contact parties blunder into the enemy's positions. The reliefs are met by guides, usually men of their own battalion sent up previously to get familiar with the new positions. Even with this assistance, it is often a difficult business. The relief takes place at night, and in dark and bad weather, the way can be easily missed among the maze of trenches. When moving up to open fighting positions, it is harder still, for there are no trenches to give the direction. The open line on which the day's fighting comes to an end may run unevenly, perhaps along a hedgerow, a bit of wood, some ruined farm buildings, or undulations of the ground. Beyond this line lies an indeterminate area of No Man's Land. Out there lie scouts and hidden snipers. Little groups of men, the "contact patrols" of both sides, watch one another's positions ceaselessly for signs of attack or any movement that may betray the enemy's intentions. Just before dawn these watchmen of the night come in and new men are posted. Each side of course is constantly on the lookout to harass incoming hostile reliefs. Therefore complete silence and great caution must be observed. As a rule, movement up to or from an open line in daylight is impossible. Every evening reliefs are taking place somewhere along the battle line, and, in addition to the movements of battalions and brigades, whole divisions are withdrawn at longer intervals, and have a six weeks' rest and training spell in areas, some miles behind the front. These periods of "rest," however, are quite distinct from the usual routine of reliefs.
