MORE INTEREST IN PORTO RICO

(Correspondence of Associated Press) SAN JUAN, Porto Rico, April 25.—That Congress is to take a greater interest in Porto Rico as a result of the visit of nineteen representatives who have just returned to the states after spending a week here, by the representatives themselves and by the statement of Representative Townor, of Iowa, chairman of the committee on insular affairs in the house, that a committee for congress should visit the island every two years.

The visit just concluded was in no way an official one, the representatives having been invited here as the guests of the island by the insular legislature through Resident Commissioner Cordova Davila. Their presence here was taken advantage of by representatives of all interests of the island to present statements and two days were given over to public hearings.

The representatives of the Unionist party, the majority party of the island, urged Porto Rico's independence ultimately as the attainment of their ideal but the visitors from Washington were not impressed with the idea that separation from the United States represented the real desire of the people of the island.

BLUFF OF RUSSIAN SAVES AN EXPEDITION

(Correspondence of Associated Press) ARCHANGEL, March 28.—It was largely due to the "bluff" of a young Russian naval officer in command of one of the little Allied steamers on the Dvina River that the original Allied expedition up that river from Archangel was not wiped out by the Bolsheviks in the early phases of the Northwestern Russian campaign.

The Dvina expedition, 133 strong, went poking its way nonchalantly up the broad river aboard two or three funny looking river steamers, on which field pieces and machine guns had been mounted. The Bolsheviks had taken the best boats, Mississippi type of paddlewheelers, with them in their flight.

The famous 133 reached Beresniki, nearly 200 miles south of Archangel, at the junction of the Vaga river with the Dvina, without firing a shot. One night, all of a sudden, three or four Bolshevik side-wheelers mounting big guns came around the bend in the river and started trouble. When we fired our cannon, they fell through the thin decks into the staterooms of our steamers.

A young Russian naval officer, in command of one of our little ships with his own gun out of action, stood pat, with the useless muzzle turned toward the biggest of the enemy's ships, and barred the channel while our other ships retreated.

Then our river expedition got the glad news that a British monitor, sent all the way from the Belgian coast, was on the way to help them. The monitor crawled along the sandbars and got to Beresniki. The colonel in command of the river land forces told me about it, a few weeks later, when I went up to his sector of the front. It was something of a tragedy this first episode of the monitor, but the colonel couldn't help laughing about it.

"The monitor steamed up," the colonel said, "and its captain was rowed over to my headquarters ship. The navy was on the job and so, naturally, all was over. He didn't want to stop a minute.

"Where," he shouted, "is the enemy fleet, and which is the way to Kotlass?"

"And then the monitor chugged off in the direction of the Bolshevik ship around the bend of the river. It didn't find the enemy fleet, and is certainly was a long way from Kotlass, when a Bolshevik land battery, masked in the woods on the river bank, dropped a big shell into the monitor, putting it out of commission and sending it back to Beresniki."

It was in this episode of the monitor that a young British naval surgeon performed one of the feats of bravery and self-denial that are continually taking place in this war. With one eye shot out and with blood nearly blinding the other, this young surgeon calmly and successfully attended to the monitor's wounded until he fell exhausted.

On the river our forces had reached Beresniki, on the railroad and the command of French had battalions its way nearly one hundred miles to Obosersaya, and in the swampy tundra between the railroad and the river another party, including some of the American sailors, was lost in the mud, when reinforcements in the shape of three transporters loaded with American infantrymen and engineers steamed into Archangel harbor.

FRENCH WOMEN GO IN POLITICS

(Correspondence of Associated Press) PARIS, April 20.—Women in France have hitherto been slow to make any move in politics, but a movement on their part in favor of the vote has taken recently a great step forward as is shown by a manifesto placard on the walls of Paris. The documents sets forth the claims of the women to the right to vote and adds "Women vote in Great Britain, Denmark, Norway, Finland, Germany, Austria, Poland, Bohemia, the United States, Canada, Australia and New Zealand."

The manifesto is signed by the National Council of French women, the French League for the rights of women, the society for the improvement of the condition of women, the society for the rights of mankind, the fraternal union of women, and the French women's suffrage union.

HEIR TO THRONE A POPULAR BOY

(Correspondence of Associated Press) LONDON, April 24.—Since the return of the Prince of Wales from the army in France, he has been unusually active in acquiring first-hand information on many subjects and in royal circles he is referred to as the "prince who learns things for himself."

He is said to have brought back from France the unconventional manner he acquired in his association with the troops of all ranks. The Prince rises at 7 o'clock each day, and when there are no public engagements on his program he plays racquets, of which he is exceedingly fond.
