PROSPECTORS ATTEND SCHOOL.

A new feature has been reported into desert prospecting. The Tonopah School of Mines is proving a novel and valuable adjunct that places the man in the field in a position where he can make his own determinations at little cost. With a field assaying outfit costing not more than $150 the prospector is enabled to remain in the field digging and sampling as long as his money and grub lasts without having to return to the nearest town for the purpose of ascertaining the metallic contents of his discoveries. This gives the scientific prospector an amazing advantage over the old time searcher after mineral wealth. Formerly it was a matter of months before the prospector arrived at a place where he could secure an assay and then it happened frequently that his samples were not properly labeled that the locality was somewhat uncertain and the exact location of the vein rather obscure. If it developed that some of the samples carried attractive values and it was deemed wise to undertake more thorough exploration, much time was lost in tracing the lode to its exact source. By the modern system the prospector knows from day to day the content of the ore he has found in the prospecting and he can reach an instant decision as to the necessity or expediency of going deeper in pursuing his investigations. This practice of carrying a field outfit is especially valuable where secondary abandoned mines are being tested to arrive at an approximate idea of the values remaining. Thus a man on the ground can reach a positive understanding of what is best to do as to prospecting his work without delay. The Tonopah School of Mines is doing excellent service in this direction. During the winter months the classes are patronized by field men, some of whom have made knowledge of geology. These men find the classes very helpful in adding to their storehouse of practical information and they prove earnest students, quick to grasp the determining elements.

BLEEDING UNCLE SAM.

If I had the influence of the United States treasury, I would not lend a penny to a single one of the present governments of Europe. They are not to be trusted with resources which they would devote to the furtherance of policies to which, in spite of President Wilson's failure to assert either the right or the ideals of the American people, the republican and the democratic parties are both probably opposed.

This is not the intention of Senator Lodge or any other member of the United States senate, opposed to further extension of credits to Europe but the hard headed statement of no less a person than John Maynard Keynes, British treasury expert at the peace conference who has given to the world in a 300-page book the first expert analysis of the treaty itself. He writes with no bias or prejudice, betrays no confidences and avoids personal criticism. A summary of his conclusions says forth that Europe is bankrupt and that the Paris conference did not adopt a single one of President Wilson's fourteen points, but insisted on dismembering the debtor countries until they are left without power to regenerate their industries or to regain their earning powers. The fact that Germany will not be able to meet its obligations will bankrupt France, and that Great Britain has reached the limit in financing Europe and that the financial capacity of the United Kingdom now is only two-fifths that of the United States and its income only one-third. The writer pleads for an early recognition of Russia if the world is to be saved from famine in 1921 as the North American farmers with their reduced production will not be able to supply the world beyond the current year. The review takes the ground that the republican majority in congress has steadily asserted and that President Wilson has constantly and unremittently combated with every resource at his command. The British treasury expert's observations would furnish the republican party the greatest campaign document ever sent to the printer as a means of convincing the American public that the spectacle of one-man power in the White House should not be tolerated unless the American people are ready to make the supreme sacrifice without deriving any benefit.

CRIME AGAINST DECENCY.

The specter of the Pickford divorce is still agitating the California press and will not down despite all the exorcism of wealth, station and social prominence of the people who became parties to the recent divorce enacted in the district court of Minden. The celebrity with which the divorce was granted after it was commonly understood that Nevada laws demanded a six months actual residence in the state has become the subject for extended criticism from various California editors who do not cease to flay the system that grants official sanction to the performance mentioned above. The Sacramento Bee with its accustomed directness deals with the questions involved after its peculiarly McLaughly style which is the most vigorous known on the coast. The Bee is known as one of the most liberal organs in the United States and when anything occurs to shock the editor it must be a crime of the most cardinal type. The Pickford affair is hated, resented and done brown to turn that will win the approval of all persons who believe there is something sacred about the marital relation which should not be severed on the mere application of either side to secure a severance. The main points of this able exposition follows.

The divorce Mary Pickford obtained from Owen Moore on March 1 in Minden, Douglas county, Nevada, was against the welfare of society and all decency. It was and remains a reproach to the Nevada divorce laws and to the reputation of the state.

After the divorce the screen actress told reporters it was none of the public's business. But it is the public's business and a vital part of it. Whether or not collusion prevailed in the case, the Nevada divorce law is among the rottenest of such laws. And there are some bad ones in other states, as well as bad marriage statutes.

The structure of American society is built around the stability of the family circle and the sanctity of the marriage sacrament. Lax divorce laws and carelessness on the part of the public in demanding their correction threaten the foundation of our democracy. Promiscuity in sex relations brings a terrible punishment in the form of a scourge. The progressive adultery of chronic divorcees and divorcees, a great share of whom are found among film and stage actors and actresses is a taint in the life-blood of our social system. Lax divorce laws, free love and anarchy are kindred evils. They are sinister bedfellows of bolshevism. The Pickford divorce was a revelation of how radically depraved a bad divorce law can really be. It emphasizes the need of a national law for uniform marriage and divorce provisions among the several states.

ATHLETES ARE NUMEROUS.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Calif. March 18—Fifty-eight applications were received for the position left vacant when the Stanford board of athletic control refused to re-appoint Coach Melbourne Evans. It was announced here.
