

HARDING ADDRESS TO DELEGATION

that even now are reaching out in their "perfect accord" to perpetuate the condition of extreme centralization from which America has suffered, to perpetuate the "harmonic" of phrases by which American citizenship was to be lulled into inactivity. What would Thomas Jefferson say to this? What do those Democrats who have looked upon their party as one entrusted with the safeguarding of local rights say to it? I think they, with us, contemplating the prospect toward which these years of autocratic bungling have led us, will see that it is not only a prospect over which our prosperity may be hung, but over which sound American representative government might also be dragged, and that they with the great mass of Americans, will say: "We have had enough."

When Americans say, as they do so often, "America first," they mean no one-man power, but our America as a people whose will is expressed through their representative government. They mean a nation of people whose citizenship is based upon a willingness of one to serve all, and not upon a program of herding into selfish groups, whose slogan is "What can I get?" They mean that "America first" is a spirit by which are preserved the rights of the one man, or the one group, or the one locality, only by a watchfulness by that individual, by that locality that the solitary of all America shall be preserved.

Four Sets of Obligations.
Today, for example, you have come here from the Pacific coast of our country. I do not doubt that Americans on the coast are troubled in their minds about the oriental question, as it is called. That question raises every interpretation of our watchword, "America first," for it involves four sets of obligations. It involves our obligations to great foreign powers; it involves the obligations of all America toward one group of American states and their peoples; but it also involves the obligations of that group of states to the nation.

There is abundant evidence of the dangers which lurk in racial differences. I am ever ready to recognize that the civilization of the orient is older than ours, that her peoples have their proud and honorable traditions.

In spite of the honor of these orient peoples and in spite of their contributions to the world's advancement, it is conceivable that they may be so different in racial characteristics or in manner of life or practice from other peoples of equal honor and achievements that no matter whether it be on the soil of one or upon the soil of the other, these differences, without raising any question of inferiority, superiority or inequality may create, as I believe they have created upon our Pacific coast, a situation that must be recognized. The nation owes it to the Pacific coast to recognize that fact. The nation owes it to the Pacific coast states to stand behind them, in necessary measures consistent with our national honor to relieve them of their difficulties. The problem incident to racial differences must be accepted as one existing in fact and must be adequately met for the future security and tranquility of our people. We have learned through the anxieties of world war the necessity of making the citizenship of this republic, not only American in heart and soul, but American in every sympathy and every aspiration.

No one can tranquilly contemplate the future of this republic without any anxiety for abundant provision for admission to our shores of only the immigrant who can be assimilated and thoroughly imbued with the American spirit.

From the beginning of the republic America has been a haven to the oppressed and the aspiring from all the nations of the earth. We have opened our doors freely and have given to the peoples of the world who came to us the rainbow of American opportunity and political liberty. We have come to that stage in our development which at necessity must be assumed by those who accept the grant of American opportunity. From this time on we are more concerned with the making of citizens than we are with adding to the manpower of industry or the additional human units in our various activities. As a people and a nation, as Governor Stevens has said, we do have the moral, the natural and the legal rights to determine who shall or who shall not enter our country and participate in our activities. With a new realization of the necessity of development of a sound distinctly American in the republic, we favor such modifications of our immigration laws, and such changes in our international understandings and such a policy relating to them, as come among us, as will guarantee to the citizens of this republic the only assimilation of immigrants that the acceptance of all that part of America of a stable economic and otherwise, and a full citizenship. America first, is all about.

America Agriculture:
I find that the present day gives the opportunity to put before the American people through you a consideration of an important importance, to which I ask your kind attention and attention is given a deserved place. The challenge has been taken from a manufacturing industry which requires a constant study, and now it is our agriculture that which has been a challenge for us to accept responsibility. Our great agricultural wealth is threatened by signs and portents which we must have such measures as will be effective in the future. It is our duty to the nation's health to recognize and I have said repeatedly that we must put the landowner, the farmer, the farmer and grower, the farmer and the capitalist who has the money and operate farms, and we must encourage cooperation of the farmer by the consumer and the farmer by the farmer of our country. We must measure our efforts of roads, railroads and highways, that we must invite our people into our representative and cooperative business of government. I have said that those measures would not special privileges for the farmer, but that the association of our agriculture with sufficient prosperity, so that it should share equally with industry, and have equal ability to pay labor, was not only the farmer's business, but everybody's business—the consumer's business, the city dweller's business and the vital concern of everyone who wants to live for himself and his children three meals a day.

All Are Interested.
Because the safety and prosperity of the farmers of this country are our own safety and prosperity and permanence, no man, woman or child in the United States can fail to have an interest in protecting our basic industry—that of agriculture—wherever protection is necessary by the proper use of tariff regulation.

The time has come when we are ceasing to be a food exporting nation, and must look well to making sure that we shall be self-sustaining. A failure to be self-sustaining in agriculture, in our food supply, will mean the weakness which at present and threatened our immigration. Our great allies in the world are called upon to be self-sustaining and to be as ready to go to war and to defend us in peace. We have no square national and international relations for keeping alive our own industry. The life of our own production is threatened by the life of our own production. It is necessary to give full and complete tariff protection to those Involving Our Markets.

Australia, South Africa, the Argentine, Canada, Siberia, Australia, New Zealand, may, in the advanced years, invade our markets and underlie our farmers. In the case of Argentina, wheat, Argentine corn, sugar from tropical islands, and sugar from Europe; rice from the Orient, beans and peas from the Orient, meat from South America and other imports may threaten the life of our own production. It is necessary to give full and complete tariff protection to those specific American agricultural industry. It must not be based upon any group or class which, either by the removal of rates of duty or by the removal of rates of duty, will be benefited by the tariff of agricultural products. It must be based upon our own industry, the American farmer and the American consumer. We are acting in our own interest to safeguard and balance the interests of all that, indeed, in applying protective duties or removing them, we are acting with full conscience for the rights of all at home and abroad. We are acting for America first.

to save this or any other worthy and developing agricultural industry of America, tariff protection is necessary. This tariff protection must be given.

I mark out the example of the California agricultural industry not only because you are Californians, but because you are Americans, and because the preservation of agriculture is vital, all-American interest, and above all, the interest of the consumer.

It may well be that a long list of our farm products will require a Republican protective tariff policy. There is an increasing menace to our production of a number of farm products in the opening of those countries which can produce under intensive methods with labor cheap and their own.
