FOREIGN PROPAGANDA BEING RENEWED

Official authorities of the national capital profess concern over the renewal of foreign propaganda in the United States. They allege that within the last few months the propagandists have increased and have also expanded their activities. Their efforts have likewise grown bolder.

It is charged that the stream of foreign propaganda turned in America has attained a greater volume than it achieved during the war. The papers assigned are that this country has become the strongest of all nations and governments and that the political cooperation of the United States with foreign countries is more desirable to them than ever before. Commercial and industrial interests abroad turn to America as the strategic center of the world's economies. Hence the propagandists attempt to influence or to create an American opinion favorable to themselves.

A favorite method of operation consists in appeals to one or more of the groups of American citizens of foreign origin. Another consists in the skillful use of the publicity man and of publicity literature. The number of agents of the foreign press has recently increased in the United States. There has also been corresponding multiplication of foreign information services. Washington naturally asks for what purpose foreign governments establish and maintain these efficient propaganda devices.

DEMOCRATS IGNORED CIVIL SERVICE LAWS

During the course of ill-tempered and intemperate attacks which democratic senators made upon the president because of his dismissal of certain officials connected with the United States bureau of engraving and printing, republican senators made some very pointed comments regarding the hypocrisy of democratic professions of friendship for civil service. Senator New, republican of Indiana, said:

"Mr. President, I undertake to say and to attempt to justify by the facts that there never was so partisan an administration as the one which closed on the 4th day of March, 1921. That administration filled up the departments here with incompetents to the point where if a caller on business wanted to reach the head of one of the departments he had to follow his way through a crowd, like getting up to the ticket wagon of a circus. That was the condition in regard to the departmental offices; the appointments fairly crowded each other out on the sidewalk. Ten thousand of them have very happily, been separated from the service since the present administration came in; a great many more thousands can be separated to the very great benefit of the service; and, speaking for myself, I very earnestly hope they may be, but whether or not they shall be, I do not undertake to say."

Senator Moses, republican of New Hampshire, in commenting upon the democratic trades, said:

"I want to say, apropos of the performance that has gone on here on the floor of the senate because of what is described as an outrage, the removal of 27 office holders, if republican senators eight and nine years ago had devoted their time and taken the time of the senate in the discussion of questions of that character, there would have been no legislation whatever because we saw democratic administration come in and absolutely ravage every department of the public service. And then when they had filled all the postoffices with their selections they put over them a blanket of civil service law. I wish to say that the whole pretence in the matter about the bureau of engraving and printing is absolutely childish and ridiculous."

In the course of the debate, Senator Harrell, republican of Oklahoma, brought out the fact that under a law enacted by the democratic congress of 1916 there was a provision to the effect that appointments under the law could be made without restriction or limitation but that the civil service rules should apply for two years, and that during that time thousands of democrats were inducted into office and then blanketed under the civil service protection.

It remained for Senator Norris, republican of Nebraska, to administer the most scathing arraignment of the democratic hypocrisy in regard to civil service. He was inspired to this effort by a long lamentation by Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska, deploring the alleged prostitution of civil service by the present administration. He read into the record the letters written from Hitchcock's office by his private secretary during 1919, which proved, as he said, that Hitchcock "believes in civil service when the republican party is in power, and he believes to the victors belong the spoils when the democrats are in control. The tears he is shedding now for the civil service were tears of scorn when Woodrow Wilson was in the White House. He is complaining now because officials are putting democrats out and republicans in, not when Woodrow Wilson was in power and before my colleague's reelection to the senate was so close at hand he was demanding that democratic politicians be placed in office and that the civil service commission should be scrapped." Senator Norris made specific charges and quoted letters and documents written by Senator Hitchcock's secretary to show that he was a spoils man of the most exaggerated type during the democratic administration.

BINDING UP WOUNDS OF A NATION

To bind up a nation's wounds is a sublime phrase, but to Uncle Sam's federal board of vocational education it is a gripping daily duty as well.

Under the provisions of the act of June 2, 1920, the federal board is now charged with the immense duty of administering vocational rehabilitation to the nation's army of industrial cripples. The magnitude of the task may be glimpsed when it is realized that the annual toll of workers injured in industry approximates 600,000. Somebody has computed that American industry has the unenviable record of a workman killed every six minutes, and one injured every 14 seconds. When the republican congress set up rehabilitation machinery under the federal board for the relief of these unfortunates, it was realized that such action was long overdue.

Rehabilitation is accomplished by means of vocational re-education. Nearly every case of industrial injury admits of re-education in another trade where the handicap of injury can be overcome. For instance, the blind have been successfully taught weaving, chair making and bric-a-brac work; leg-amputation cases have been retained in vocations where they can work seated; arm amputation cases (the most difficult of all) have been fitted with artificial arms and enabled to carry on in new tasks where hand skill is unnecessary. From the despair of pauperism and helplessness rehabilitation lifts the industrial victim into a new pride of self-dependence and activity.

To establish this merciful undertaking the congress made a first year appropriation of $750,000, to be increased to $1,000,000 for each of the succeeding three years. This original appropriation will carry the work through the experimental and organization stage.

Industrial rehabilitation is administered in cooperation with the different states. In each state accepting the federal act, a state industrial rehabilitation agency has been set up under the state board of vocational education, which directly administers the work. The federal funds are apportioned among these state agencies on condition that the state or local authorities match or exceed the federal allotment. In practice, most of the states appropriate much more than the federal requirement.

Statistics of the extent of industrial rehabilitation are not yet available, as all the states have not yet organized to cooperate in administering the act. Reports from 22 of the states for the last fiscal year showed 3,393 cases listed, 2,132 cases surveyed, 476 cases put in training, and 623 cases rehabilitated by states. During the present year rapid progress has been made in extending the service. For the first five and one-half months of the year the registration actually mounted 265 per cent. Thirty-three states have now accepted the federal act and set up rehabilitation machinery.

Red headed girls of the country are up in arms because a Boston critic claims they all have crooked legs. We're from Missouri.

Famous Tree Moves To Sacred Ground

AUTOCASTER

If Daniel Webster, famous American statesman, should return to Washington looking for the shade tree under which he rested at his home there, he might be surprised to find it growing healthfully in another part of town. The tree, as shown in the picture, has been moved over to the Lincoln Memorial Grounds for preservation and given prominent place.

ST. AUGUSTINE IS PROUD OF MEMORIAL

Its Associated Press: WASHINGTON, April 15.—Placing of a bronze tablet in the federal building at St. Augustine, Fla., relating to the historical importance of the site on which the building stands has been approved by the treasury department, acting on the request of the St. Augustine Historical society of which Chauncey M. Depew is president.

The tablet will state that the original building was purchased by the king of Spain in 1693 for 1000 ducats as a dwelling for the Spanish governor general. The site was under the Spanish flag for 200 years and under the British flag for 20 years. It has been under the American flag since July 19, 1821.

The examining board for holding engineers will meet Monday, April 17th, 4 p. m., in the court house in Tonopah.
